What We're All About . . .

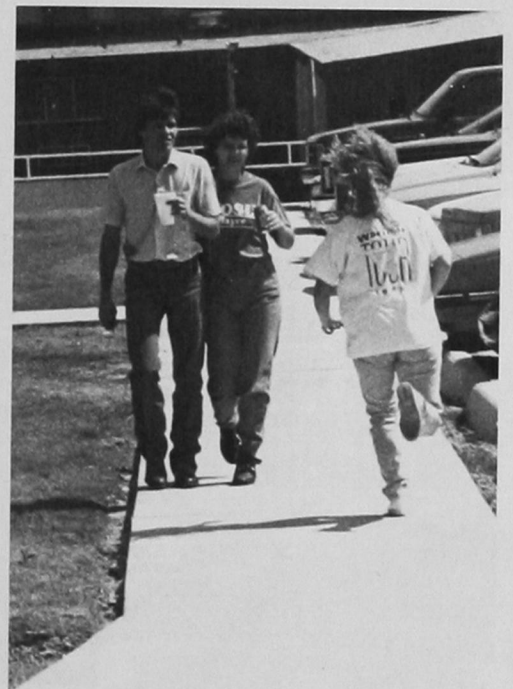

Louthwestern Oklahoma State University at Sayre appears small and ordinary on the outside, but those who look further find a unique educational institution.

After merging with SWOSU at Weatherford in 1987, the Sayre Campus has undergone many changes. Even with all of the modifications, an open-door policy remains in effect allowing people who might not otherwise be able to continue their education, to enter college. Being a name instead of a number reminds students they are special. The education at SWOSU at Sayre remains superior. A nationally recognized health careers program is available on the Sayre Campus. While the school also specializes in a notable business curriculum, an excellent general education can be gained for those wanting to go on to a larger university.

Student life animates the campus. Several organizations are continually involving the students in their endeavors. Annual activities, such as the Student Senate Hamburger Fry, include everyone. On the average day, the Student Lounge and BSU are always busy cooking something up.

To the casual observer, SWOSU at Sayre may not look too outstanding, but those who get involved discover it is an extraordinary place to be.

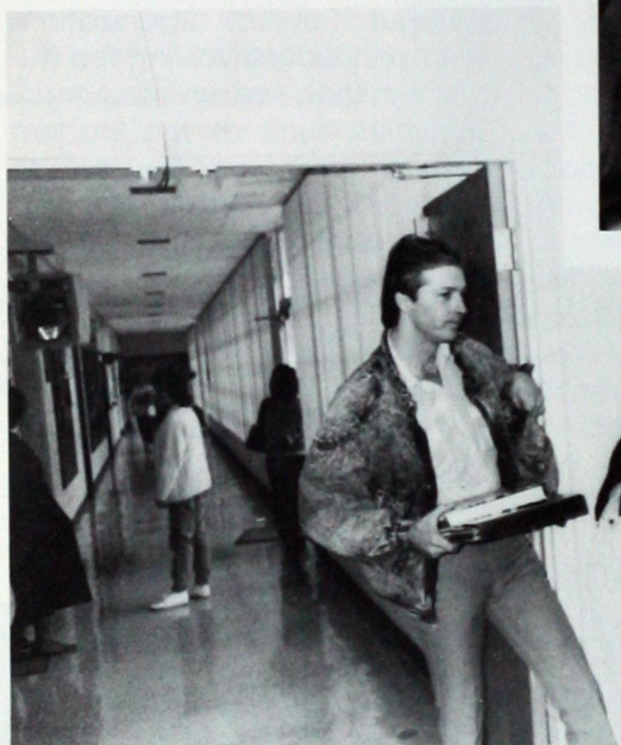

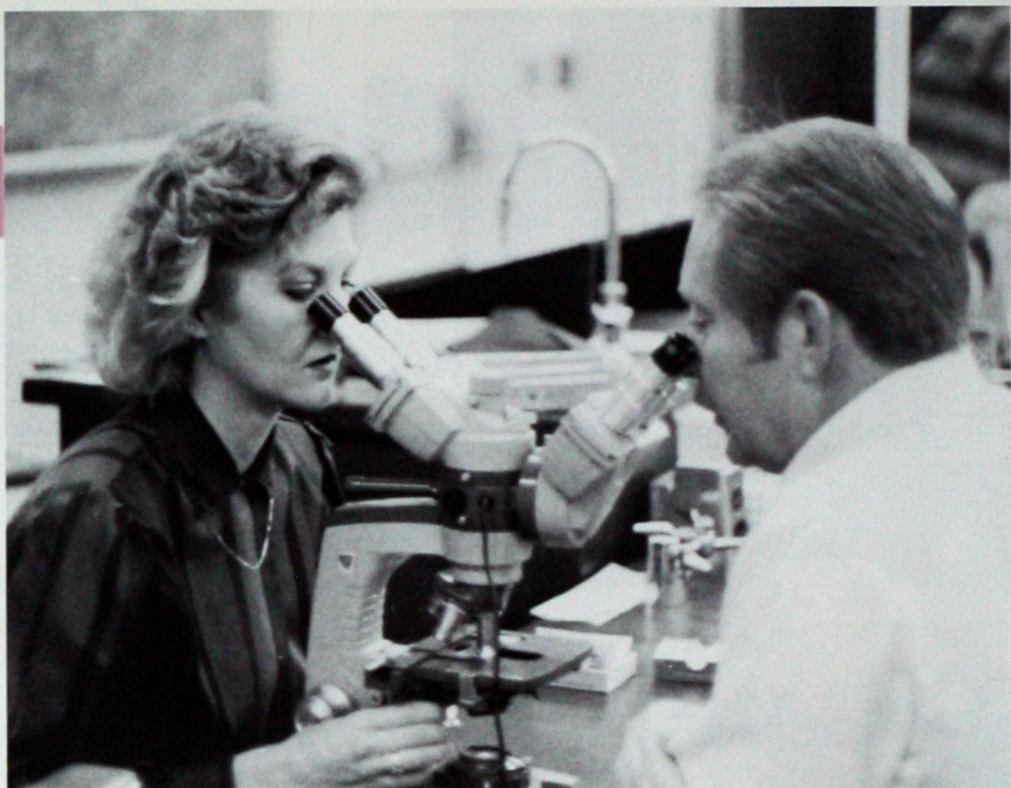

Say Cheese. Donna Harper takes time out for a picture while studying in the Student Lounge in the Classroom Building.

Open wide! Ronnie Arganbright and Wally Stark enjoy burgers at the annual Student Senate Hamburger Fry.

R and D: Research and Development proved that new sidewalks are both beneficial and convenient.

It's alive! Instructor Roxann Coker helps Gary Paxson focus in on a slide during a Blood Chemistry class.

Relaxing. Ann Gwartney and Russell Fuchs watch some TV in the Student Lounge.

Faces and Places

College classrooms and campuses may be envisioned as a "sea of unfamiliar faces within a maze of strange places."

Southwestern at Sayre, on the contrary, is just like taking a new look at a familiar face.

Students are relieved to discover most of the faces are familiar because the majority of the students come from surrounding high schools and have seen each other at activities or competed with one another in sports.

Drawn together now in small classes, these familiar faces take on names; and these names become the ones with whom you car pool, lunch, study, cry, gripe, and call your friends.

Friendliness applies to the teachers as well. Teachers and students visit in the halls and lounges, and students say, "Teachers don't even seem like teachers."

The friendly faces and places at Sayre Campus combine for a unique and rewarding college experience.

Hypnotized Donna Harper and Tiffany Hansen shed a few tears while watching the saddest movie ever.

Excited about coming to class, Cody Hall kicks up his heels.

Pulling the string is the name of the game with Sherry Thompson and Leslie Chick working in the booth for SOEA at the Halloween Carnival.

Christmas in the library. Connie Wingfield and Janet Hodge play Santa's elves and decorate the tree.

Chow time, Lora Little, Shanna Miller, and Carrie Damron enjoy burgers from the Student Senate.

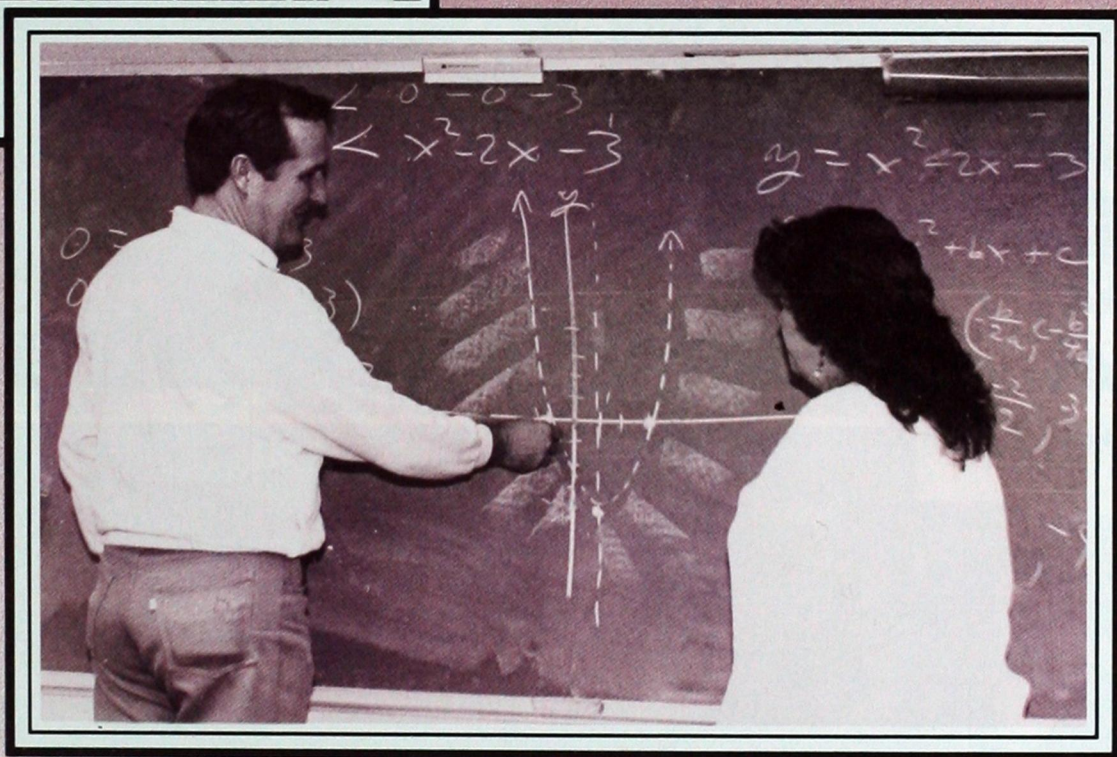

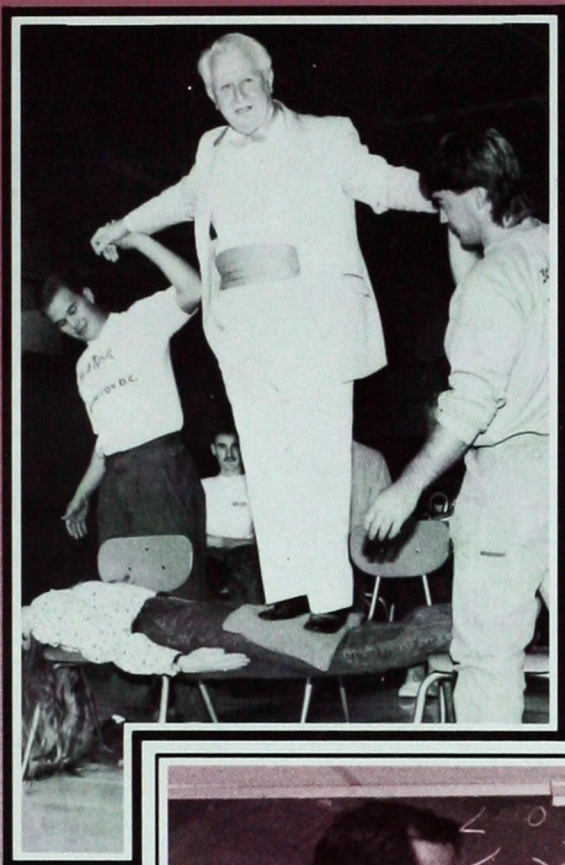

Working up an appetite, Steven Stewart and James King play foosball at the BSU before Noon Day lunch.

"The foot bone is connected to the leg bone." Donna Gheer and Christi Mooney put together a skeleton in Human Physiology while other students watch.

With a few minutes to spare, Timothy Viers, Pam Daniels, and Edward Cloyd take time to catch up on the latest news.

The Desk Set

In the classrooms, the desks are all the same in size, shape, and form. They are lined up in rows as if in military formation.

Not so with the many students on the campus of SWOSU at Sayre. They come in all sizes, shapes, and forms and are found in every nook and cranny.

Every student, of course, has a different personality. Some you will find are funny, some are serious, and some are seriously funny.

There's one thing for sure, you will discover a wide variety of people in the Desk Set at SWOSU at Sayre.

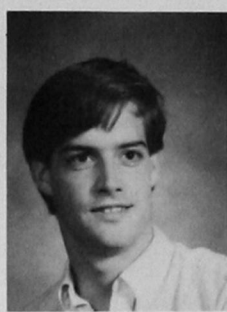

Filling away their time in Records Management are Deena Parr and Kristi Rice.

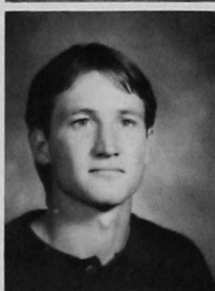

During noon hour students relax in the lounge area of the Student Center.

Playday-Graduation Cap Off the Year

Congratulations go to Linda Armstrong and Brett Berryhill as they receive their diplomas from Dean Roberts.

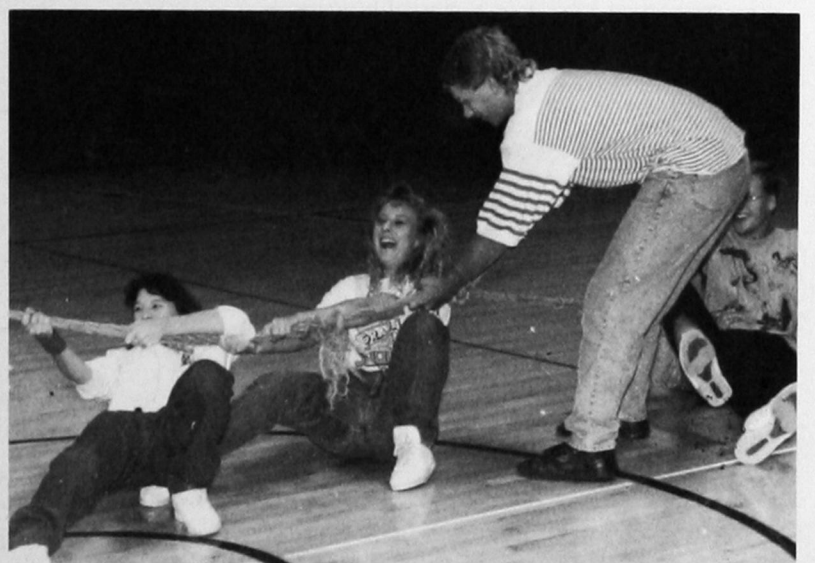

Reaping the Rewards, Tonya Bruner enjoys the reception and graduation gifts with her friend and former student, Teresa Baird.

Excitement mounts as graduates line up for the big moment.

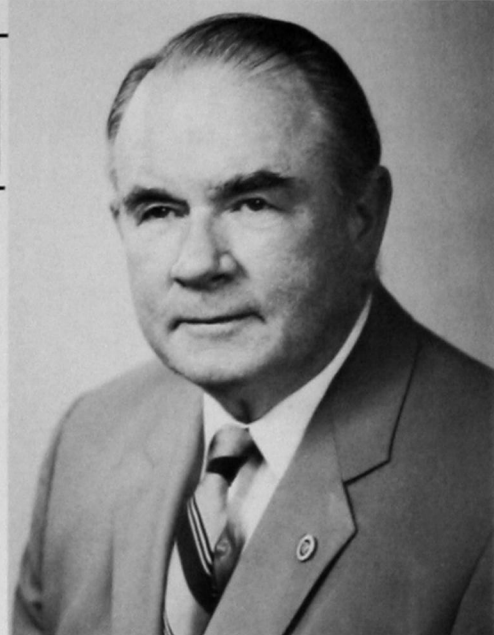

Till the bitter end — and that's where sack race participants, Ronnie Arganbright and Phil Green (left) and tug-of-war team, Shawnda Moore, Renae Hindman, Marty Summers and Duane Mills end up. Play day was held inside because of rain.

People of Policy

From admittance standards to funds allocations, the Governor and Regents set the guidelines for Oklahoma colleges and universities. While some issues require legislative approval, the Regents catch the flak for yearly tuition hikes and controversial policies. Consequently, the year was marked by frequent resignations and replacements among the members of the two governing boards.

SWOSU administrators increased pressure upon the Regents to gain special status for Sayre which would result in lower tuition, out-of-state fee waivers, and a larger allocation of funds.

What is a TEACHER?

Teachers go to class, lecture for 45 minutes, then pile on the homework, right? Not necessarily. There is more to teaching than that.

First, let's find some synonyms for teacher: educator, tutor, preceptor, adviser, mentor, trainer. That's a considerable job for one person. At SWOSU at Sayre the teachers are all of these. Besides lecturing, they work to help the students learn. They regard each student as important. When a student is having trouble, the teacher looks for the source of the problem so that, together, they can overcome it. In conjunction with other faculty members, they collaborate to maintain a superior level of education on the Sayre Campus.

After school hours are over, a teacher's work is not finished. Much time is spent grading papers and preparing lessons. Some teachers take even more time to help with extracurricular activities. A teacher's job is by no means 9 to 5.

The teachers at SWOSU at Sayre should be recognized for their hard work to provide students with the quality of education they need and want.

The Little Things

Have you ever wondered who takes out the trash at school? Or, did you think about the person who puts the magazines back on the shelf in the library (You just thought it was easy on you!)? Not much thought is given to the "little things" that go on around the school. Miraculously, the offices run orderly, the lawns stay beautiful, and the books in the library can be found easily. But, who's behind these miracles? Not surprisingly, the support personnel.

In the shadows, the secretaries, business managers, librarians, registrar, and maintenance people, along with others, work to keep the college running smoothly. The work they do is often overlooked; but if the jobs were to be neglected, the results would be noticeable. The support personnel are the backbone of the school.

The "little things" are important.

BUSINESS

The Keys to Success

Furthering their education with business courses, students gain both the knowledge and skills which are so crucial in getting a good job in the business world today.

Accounting, typing, office machines, computers, and economics are just some of the required courses for either the associate, associate in applied science, or the secretarial certificate programs.

Working on the computer is easier with partners as Janet Hinkle, Melanie Slife, Jeanne Teague, and Pansy Graham learn.

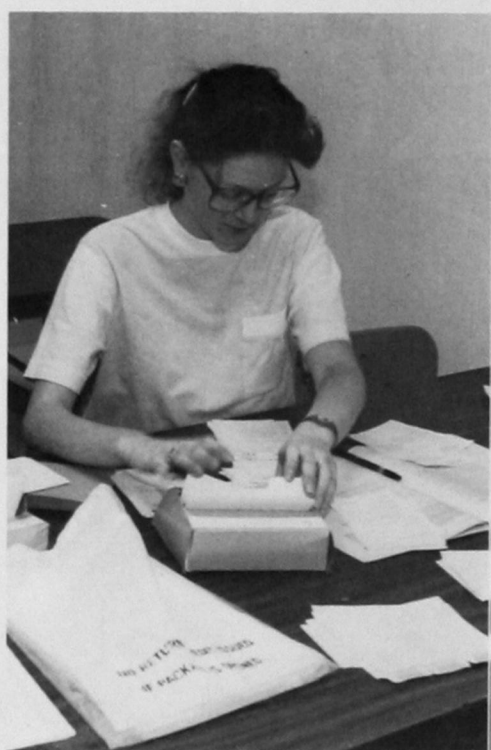

The dreaded timed writings in Typing II and III help students develop speed and accuracy.

Organization is the name of the game which Shawnda Moore tries to win in Records Management class.

Keying by touch in Business Math, students like Julie Bridge and Herbert Pruitt (front) and Cody Hall, Lora Little and JoQuetta McEntire put these skills to work in solving math problems.

Trying to find a letter, Audra Winburn flips through her files in Records Management.

HEALTH CAREERS

Special Skills Needed

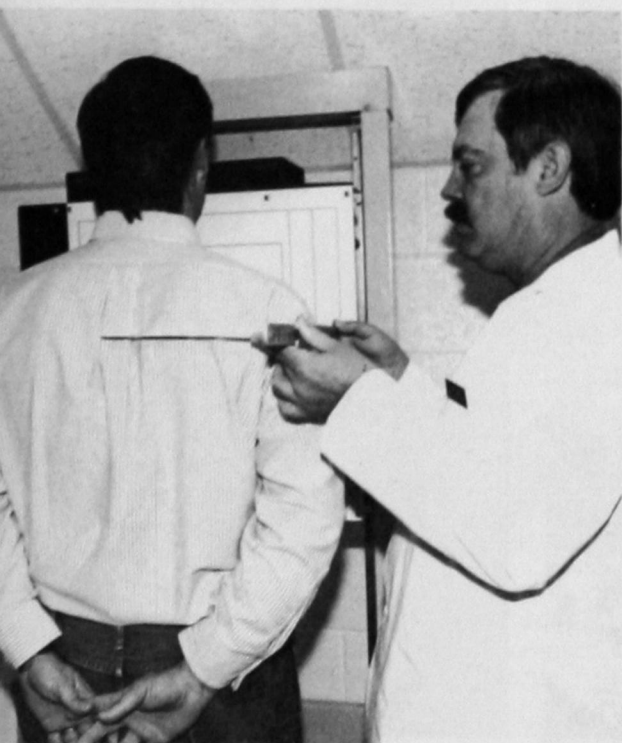

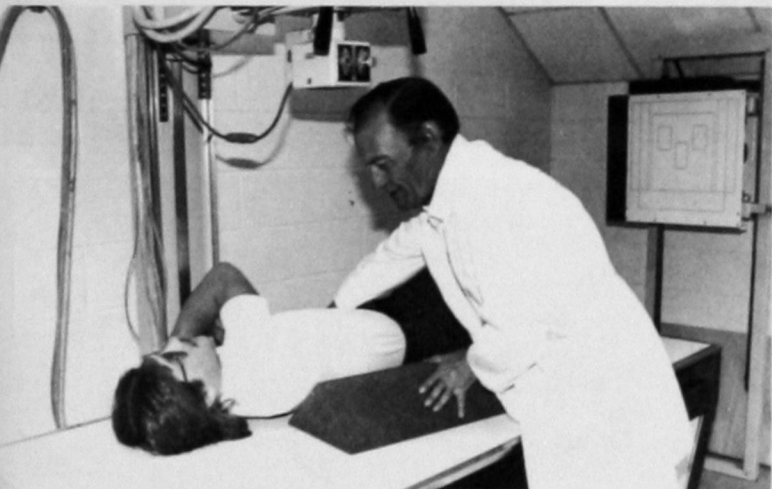

It takes a person with a lot of patience to tackle a career in the health field. Whether in medical technology, radiography, nursing, or one of the other related fields, all require intense training and unerring accuracy mixed with a caring attitude.

Students receive many hours of classroom study, plus months of clinical practice.

Careful observation of every detail on a slide is practiced by Ruth Hall and Larry Cunningham in their lab assignments.

Radiography student, Dub Griffin, demonstrates positioning for a lumbar spine on fellow student and patient, Calvin Butler.

In their Clinical Practice at Elk City Community Hospital, students Cheri Baker, Vickie Fields and Cheryl Larabee listen as Hospital Supervisor John Starbuck explains the ultrasound image.

Measurements for a chest x-ray of Joe Gastineau are taken by Don Long. Students like these had the advantage of a new energized lab which was completed this year for use in the radiography department.

The parts of the gall bladder as shown on an x-ray are pointed out by Carl Snider to Kelly Proctor and Tom Griffin in their training.

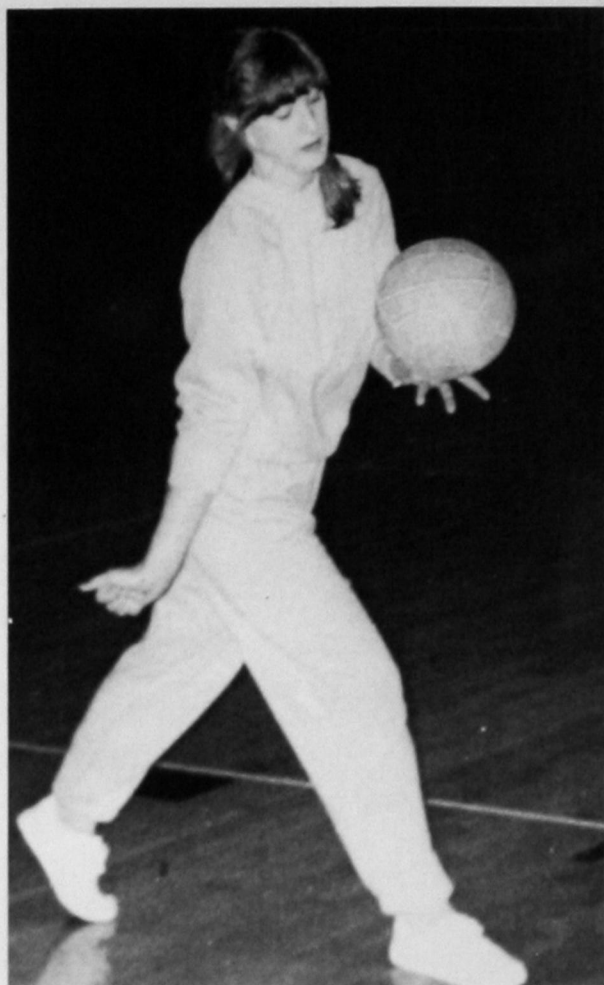

LECTURES

The Classroom Routine

Enrollment increased in general education courses as high school graduates found it less expensive to attend the first two years of college closer to home. Larger lecture rooms were necessary for many of the general ed classes.

1, 2, 3, punch. Kimberly Dennis learns how to serve up the volleyball.

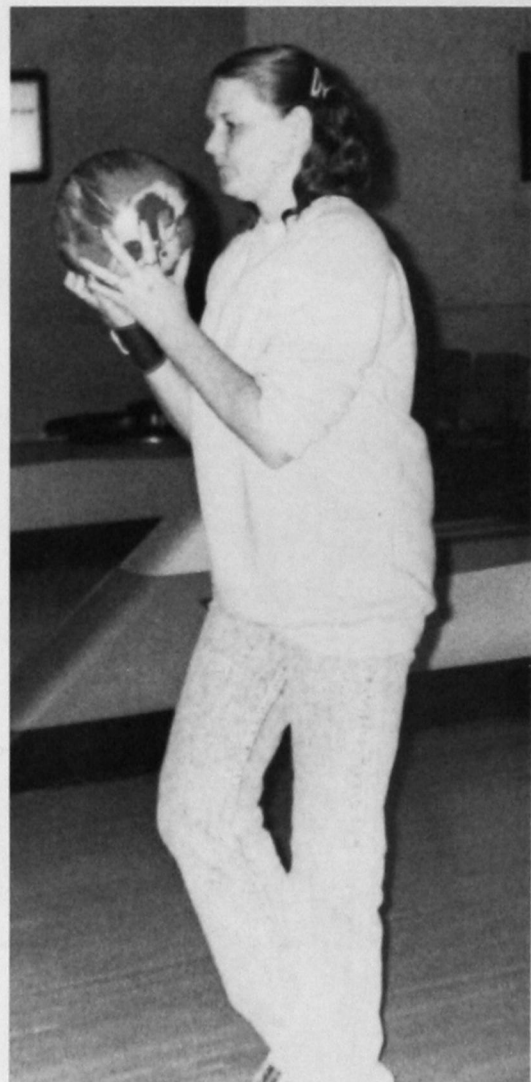

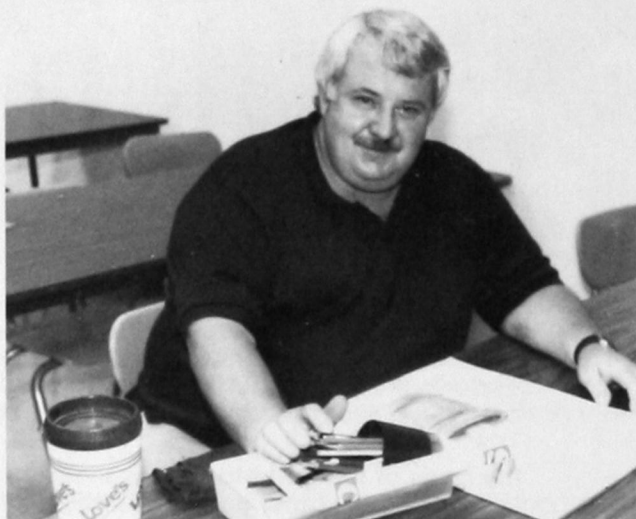

Science labs require Shelly Cain, Renae Hindman, Diane Craig and Linda Helwer to spend lots of time looking through the microscope.

English Comp. class hears about creative writing from Debbie Kea who writes for a local newspaper.

Displaying his sketch, Ken Gray improves his talent in Art Appreciation.

Physical education classes like bowling are a favorite. Estelle Sims concentrates for a strike.

WHO'S WHO

The Academic Leaders

Who's Who students are chosen because of their academic achievement, service to the community, leadership, and potential for continued success. Selection is made by a campus committee of faculty and administration.

GRADUATION

Discover the Future

Graduates receiving their associate degrees will launch out once again to learn what the future holds. Some will embark upon careers; others will undertake at least two more years of education to finish their bachelor's degrees.

Honorees and their families enjoy the reception following graduation. DeAun Hines and her family, the Terry Downses, are served cake and punch.

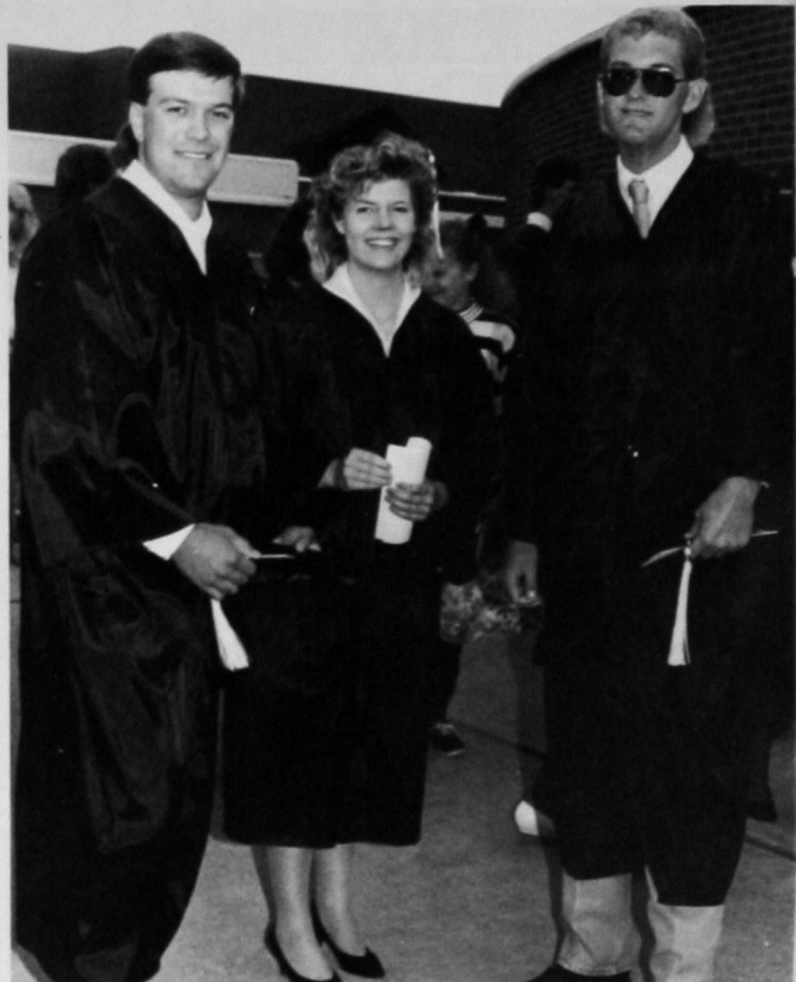

Memories are made of this. Greg Plummer, Deena Parr, and Neal Pennington prepare to line up for the processional.

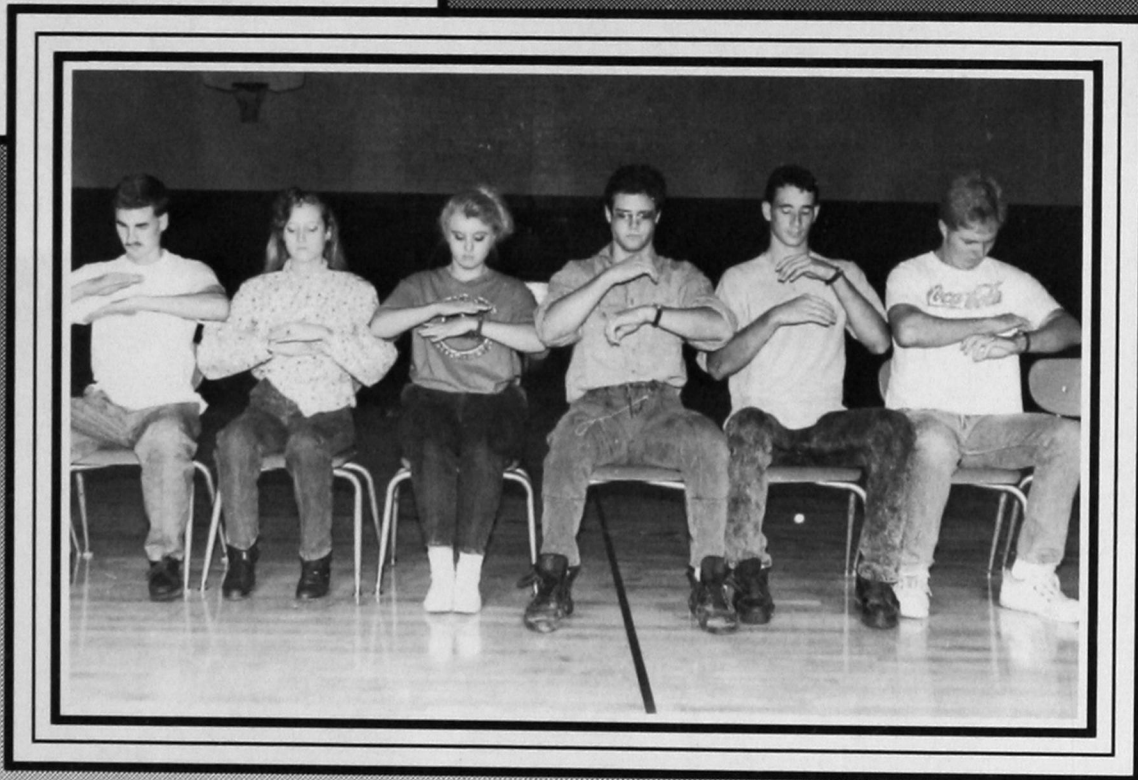

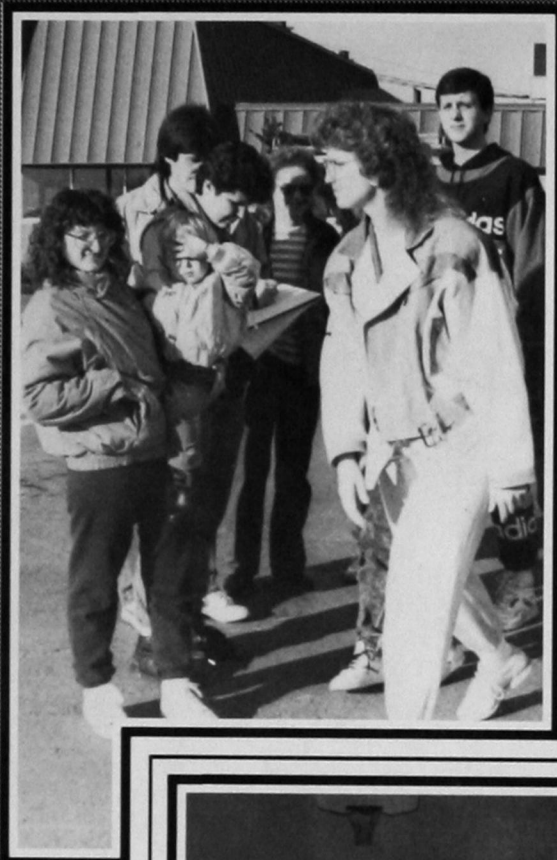

Conferring of Degrees is made by President Campbell as the graduates get ready to receive their diplomas.

The Convocation Address is given by dentist and guest speaker Cliff Ray of Haskell, Texas. Ray is a former SJC graduate.

"I May Never Pass This Way Again" sings graduate Candace Lakey.

their quest for spiritual maturity.

To encourage regular attendance, BSU'ers were divided into four teams that earned points by memorizing Bible verses, giving testimonies, and attending weekly Bible studies. The winners were treated to steak dinners.

Bible studies, noonday lunches, and foose ball games are all events that regularly occur at the BSU Center, but the activities are not limited to these. In fact, director David Curry performed the wedding of students Ray Vidaurri and Rhonda Lewallen at the Center.

BSU is an avenue that provides a unique growing experience.

Journalism — the world of Pica Poles and Layout Sheets

Being a member of the yearbook and newspaper staffs meant long hours of hard work and the pressure of deadlines. Writing and re-writing copy to find just the right word taxed even the best English student.

Under the pressure of weekly deadlines, the staff of Campus Highlights authored 23 issues of the paper which is printed by the University Press on the Weatherford campus as a part of their publication The Southwestern.

Discover, the 1990 Sayre Campus yearbook, was produced by a staff of eight students and 400 copies were published by Taylor Publishing Co., of Dallas, TX at a cost of $5,000.

The 48 pages were printed on 70 pound enamel paper and utilizes #37 cameo pink ink on the first signature and end sheets which differ front from back. The cover is staff designed in teal blue #7 with a graduated screen in cameo pink #37 on a white background. Typography features the various fonts of avant garde.

All candid and group pictures were taken and processed by the staff. Individual student pictures were made by Blunck's of Clinton, OK.

Instructor Marlene Breeze and Taylor Representative Tom Quaid served as advisors.

Discover is given to students as a part of activity fees.
