Volume 3
Issue 2 Winter

12-1-1983

Westview: Vol. 3, Iss. 2 (Winter 1983)

Follow this and additional works at: https://dc.swosu.edu/westview
Part of the Fiction Commons, Nonfiction Commons, Photography Commons, and the Poetry Commons

Recommended Citation
Available at: https://dc.swosu.edu/westview/vol3/iss2/1

This Full Issue is brought to you for free and open access by the Journals at SWOSU Digital Commons. It has been accepted for inclusion in Westview by an authorized administrator of SWOSU Digital Commons. For more information, please contact phillip.fitzsimmons@swosu.edu.
Readers and writers, please help us. We need additional quality manuscripts. Actually, we want fuller participation from a more representative sampling of our Western Oklahoma writers.

Our submissions don't always work out as we prefer; for instance, in this issue on Western Oklahoma Athletics, we really wanted an article on Binger's Johnny Bench. We even tried to solicit one, but our solicitee never did respond to our request.

After having to go to press without Johnny, we decided to make some of our needs for the future better known. For future issues, we're very much interested in featuring certain people; therefore, we hope that some of our reader-writers will take heed. For our Summer, 1985 issue (deadline: April 1, 1985), we need articles on Frontier Western Oklahoma subjects; for our Fall, 1985 issue (deadline: July 1, 1985), articles on Augusta Metcalf and Fred Olds. We need, in short, reader-writers who will study all of our projections and send submissions.

We hope that our contributors will observe these amenities of the writing profession:

1. Always mail a manuscript flat in a manila envelope, not forgetting the SASE for a possible rejection.
2. Use a coversheet that contains name, address, telephone number, and suggested issue and section (Landmarks, Memories, Inspiration, etc.). We want each contributor's identity to remain a secret during the assessing process.
3. Remember the importance of a clean, as-perfect-as-possible typewritten (double-spaced) manuscript. Use a good grade of 8½ x 11 white paper.
4. Be sure that your name is nowhere on the manuscript.

We thank you for your continued interest in and support of WESTVIEW.

— Leroy Thomas
Editor
Published by Southwestern Oklahoma State University
Weatherford, Oklahoma

Winter

Volume 3 Oklahoma Athletics Issue Number 2

CONTENTS

NOSTALGIA
From Broomcorn Champion to National Wrestling Champion .......................................................... Kate Jackson Lewis 4
Bright Carnival ........................................................................................................................................... Joanna Thurston Roper 6
Cumulus Clouds ..................................................................................................................................... Sheryl L. Nelms 6
Blanket the Years ................................................................................................................................. Hazel Bell 6

PERSPECTIVES
Kelli ......................................................................................................................................................... Pat Kourt 7
The Long Sleep ......................................................................................................................................... Hazel Bell 8
Western Oklahoma Ice Storm ................................................................................................................ Sheryl L. Nelms 8

SPECIAL ITEMS
Book Review  Rig Nine by William Rintoul ......................................................................................... Donita L. Shields 9
Future Issues .................................................................................................................................................. 10

FITNESS
A Positive Approach ................................................................................................................................. Donita Lucas Shields 14
Blackballed ................................................................................................................................................ Patsy Evans 12

LANDMARKS
Killing the Rooster .................................................................................................................................... Sheryl L. Nelms 14
The Ladies ..................................................................................................................................................... Debbie Duerksen and Shalia Wakeman 16

MEMORIES
Gone Days .................................................................................................................................................. R. R. Chapman 21
Chinook ...................................................................................................................................................... Sheryl L. Nelms 22
Tenting in the Oklahoma Panhandle ......................................................................................................... Sheryl L. Nelms 22
Memory Undaunted ..................................................................................................................................... Jean Newlin 23
John Stokes: All American Kid ................................................................................................................... Todd Winn 26

GALLERY

EDITORIAL STAFF
Editor ................................................ Dr. Leroy Thomas Publisher ...................................................... Dr. Robin Montgomery
Assistant Editor Dr. Christopher Gould Staff Writer ................................................................. Donita Lucas Shields
Assistant Editor Dr. Roger Bromert Art Director ................................................................. David Oldham

COVER
Memory Undaunted by Ben Test

WESTVIEW is the official quarterly of the Southwestern Center for Regional Studies. To be published in the journal are scholarly articles, local history sketches, memoirs, biographies, autobiographies, graphic arts, book reviews, and creative writing. Submissions along with SASE, are to be sent to: Dr. Leroy Thomas; Editor, WESTVIEW; Southwestern Oklahoma State University; Weatherford, Oklahoma 73096. All works appearing herein are copyrighted by the Southwestern Center for Regional Studies of Weatherford, Oklahoma.
CONTRIBUTORS

AUTHORS WHOSE WORKS APPEAR IN THIS ISSUE

Hazel Bell, a resident of Purcell, is a freelance writer who specializes in poetry and features.

---

R. R. Chapman, 94 plus years old, lives in Arapaho. Several of his works have previously appeared in WESTVIEW.

---

Debbie Duerksen and Shalia Wakeman are SOSU English majors. Debbie is editor of THE SOUTHWESTERN, student newspaper, and Shalia is managing editor. Debbie, a senior, is from Corn; Shalia, a junior, is from Woodward.

---

Patsy Evans, a SOSU ALUMNA, teaches English at Bethel School near Shawnee.

---

Pat Kourt teaches English at Thomas High School; her works have appeared often in this journal.

---

Kate Jackson Lewis of Purcell is a retired Language Arts teacher of Oklahoma schools. She is now writing a book about her forty years as a classroom teacher.

---

Sheryl L. Nelms, a prolific poet, headquarters in Hurst, Texas. She often conducts poetry workshops for writers' organizations.

---

Jean Newlin is a NON DE PLUME for a veteran classroom teacher and a freelance writer living in Weatherford.

---

Joanna Thurston Roper, an alumna of Harding College and SOSU, teaches English Composition at SOSU.

---

Todd Winn, from Junction City, Kansas, is a sophomore SOSU student.

---

FULL SERVICE BANK

"Growing By Helping Others Grow"

Security State Bank

CHEYENNE, OKLAHOMA

—Since 1912—

497-3354

FDIC

Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation
Laurence Mantooth, Purcell, never saw a school-officiated wrestling match until he was in college. Neither can he remember a time when he didn't know how to wrestle. Growing up with three brothers made wrestling come as natural as cutting teeth--and almost as soon.

When a lad, Mantooth took his place during harvest with 25 or 30 hired workers on his father's broomcorn farm near Wayne. He said, "We would work awhile, swim in the river, then wrestle in sand under cottonwood trees. After high school, I never lost a broomcorn match. There was only one weight. Weighing 127, I wrestled men up to 225 pounds. I won because I was in better condition."

Mantooth, OU's first gold medal-winning athlete, and national wrestling champion for 1929 and 1930, was inducted into the Helms Foundation Wrestling Hall of Fame in 1969. Now retired, the "Scissor King" keeps fit by the same methods he practiced as a wrestler--except the mat work-outs. He hunts and fishes near his boyhood home on the Washita River. After catching his limit of fish, he swims in the same spot. "Swimming," according to Mantooth, "made my arms, legs and back strong. I credit it with my wrestling success."

A trick of fate kept Mantooth from wrestling at Oklahoma A&M (OSU). No recruiter knocked on his door. In his time, recruiters were a scarce breed. Too, wrestling scholarships were not offered. Sure, Mantooth could wrestle! His skill was apparent to his Wayne high school basketball coach who urged him to go to college and wrestle. Not knowing his mat-potential, the talented athlete went out for track and basketball when he enrolled at A&M. During his freshman year, he passed by Coach Gallagher's office door every day--never once entering. Later when Mantooth was winning his skill was apparent to his Wayne high school basketball coach who urged him to go to college and wrestle. Not knowing his mat-potential, the talented athlete went out for track and basketball when he enrolled at A&M. During his freshman at OU, Mr. Gallagher commented, "Why did I let a man like that get away?" After one year as a spectator at all college bouts, Mantooth had an idea that he could and would--compete the next year.

Using a new car as bait Mantooth's father suggested that his son commute from the family's new farm home near Lexington. Competing on the freshman mat team at OU he practiced two days and won a gold medal in the great Mr. Gallagher saying, "Laurence, you can beat this coaches that ever lived said that to me knowing that I sweet. "I was stretching against the ropes -- boxing ring Olympics." Mantooth lamented. That cost me a gold medal and a trip to the '28 against a man I had already defeated in conference play. Mantooth said that wrestling season started for him --not to wrestle -- but to boost his team's morale. The greying athlete wondered how the well-supported athlete of today manages on his fare. "I worked on campus jobs for 35¢ an hour. After marrying Margaret (Beam), my high school sweetheart, we both worked at that wage. We lived in a run-down half-basement apartment with my brother, Albert, and my teammate, Marvin Leach. We four learned to live on a close budget and Margaret and I saved enough to pay her second-half of Purcell, Chamber of Commerce, and American Legion member. During Mantooth's City Council tenure, the town installed new sewer lines, added water-well service, built a modern, fully-equipped hospital and a Multi-Purpose center. For his outstanding service record won him the '69 "Man of the Year" award. Mantooth, now spends his spare time fishing and hunting.
Blanket The Years

— universal thief —

by Hazel Bell

Time was —
When lithe and bronze she stood,
Jet eyes flirting
And inky hair,
Long as the corn rows,
Lay in braided trails
And touched her slender hips.

Dashing young braves
Vied for her full, red pouting lips.
Daughter of a chief
She was — and vain.

Time was —
A cradleboard
Clung to her shoulders,
And a fringe of pitch-black
Hair bobbed from a blanket therein.

Tales she told
And children listened Spell-bound.

Now winter - old she sits,
While others' children
Dash past her bulky form.

She shivers in the chill
And gathers her flimsy Old blanket
Around her winter soul.

Cumulus Clouds

by Sheryl Nelms

a gallon of rich country cream hand whipped into stiff peaks
flung from the beaters into dollops across the blue oilcloth

Bright Carnival

— a scene sometimes observed during a Western Oklahoma winter —

by Joanna Thurston Roper

A million icy carets shimmered the world in the golden sun.
Tree limbs shone brittle in the light,
and yucca blades hardened to a glisten.
Fence posts with silver shadows surrounded fields of crystal tangles, and clumps of fragile weeds stood four square, each stem a sculpture — iced, sheathed and armorcoated.
Then the golden sun fused the kaleidoscope colors,
and the ice carnival was gone.
Kelli led the Lady Bulldogs to NAIA championships and was named most valuable player in NAIA tournaments for two years.

Kelli

by Pat Kourt

Slender and tall of stature;
Strong in both body and character,
She performs her strategies and shots.
like a veteran actress on stage.

Alert and flashing with determination;
Quick to detect an important break,
Her hazel eyes reflect triumph
like mirrors of her ingenious mind.

Cool and unmoved in emotion;
Concerned with accurate maneuvers,
Her concentration seems impenetrable like a screen of protection.

Disappointed and quietly disgusted with fouls;
Elated with a hard-fought battle,
She relaxes with the crowd's applause
As the final buzzer shouts victory.

Defeated or victorious, on or off the court;
Wearing Thomas green or Bulldog white,
She is truly an All-American!
The Long Sleep
by Hazel Bell

And so the old man sleeps —
Dreaming of clear, blue streams
Where fish jump free
And mule-deer pause to drink,
Trembling and alert.

He wears again the breech-cloth
And a feather in his hair.
He dances the Calumet,
Asking the Great Spirit for rain.

He hears the thundering herds of buffalo.

He squats around the campfire,
Watching the shadows leap upon the teepees.

He builds the wigwam and birchbark canoe.
His step is noiseless in the forest.

The old man dreams of buffalo dances —
Wearing horns of the buffalo.

He fashions the bow
And chips the arrows for his hunt.

Winter leaves whisper in the forest.
The old man stirs in his dreams —
The Great Spirit quietly
Escorts the warrior
To his Happy Hunting Ground.

Western Oklahoma Ice Storm
by Sheryl L. Neims

fresh ice outlines the barbwire fence
like a transparent shadow

a northeast wind wiggles through the scrub oak grove

limbs rub and bump
sound gritches around like a hundred hands
squeezing cellophane
BOOK REVIEW

RIG NINE
by William Rintoul

In RIG NINE, William Rintoul presents a collection of character sketches concerning drillers, roughnecks, and roustabouts who struggle to survive the harsh milieu in which they live and work.

As Mr. Rintoul pulls the heart strings of his readers, it matters little whether these men live in the environment of crude wooden structures or towering steel skyscrapers. Regardless of the type of derricks, this world of grime, grease, and grueling hard work basically remains unchanged. Regardless of the era of drilling for oil, these men are far away from their homes and loved ones.

They are company men, hired to do dangerous jobs to the best of their abilities. Homesickness is a common malady, and the monotony of daily work tours progresses from long days into longer months. Only in their dreams and aspirations can these toughened men find solace. Each hopes someday to have a better life for himself and his family.

Each man feels certain that he will not always follow the drilling rigs from offshore Louisiana to the perma-frost regions of Alaska. He vows he will quit the job when the present hole is finished and find work closer to home. Yet the lure of good wages compels him to go with the company to the next location. He cannot break the chain that binds him. In spite of his wishes, he will continue working in oil fields until his health is broken or he retires.

An oilfield worker finds life bearable by receiving self-satisfaction in accomplishing the seemingly impossible, the unexpected glimmerings of beauty when he least expects it, and the good will and humor of his fellow workers.

RIG NINE by William Rintoul is available from Seven Buffaloes Press, Box 249, Big Timber, Montana 59011. 1983. $5.60 postpaid.

Donita L. Shields
SPRING, 1984. This issue — "Western Oklahoma Teachers" — will give our contributors a chance to give deserved honor to outstanding Western Oklahoma Educators. Deadline: January 1, 1984.

FALL, 1984. "Western Oklahoma's Colorful Past." Surely there are some interesting tales that have never been told in written form. Deadline: July 1, 1984.

WINTER, 1984. WESTERN OKLAHOMA POLITICS. This theme could breed some controversial issues, but good taste will be insisted upon. Articles on political theories as well as Western Oklahoma politicians may be submitted. Deadline: October 1, 1984.

Projected future themes are "Frontier Western Oklahoma" (Summer, 1985), "Western Oklahoma Artists and Writers" (Fall, 1985), "Famous Western Oklahomans" (Winter, 1985), and "Western Oklahoma Firsts" (Spring, 1986).
Deep down inside there has been a fear that the luxury of sedentary life in semi-retirement would catch up with me, and that it did. For the first time in my life, this summer I found myself confronted with excess pounds and inches in wrong places.

Being a scientific-minded person, I decided to go about my remodeling job with intelligence. Always my first step in solving a perplexing situation is to investigate the various procedures. The encyclopedia is always my first reference. Its information concerning weight control sounded simple enough.

A 150-pound person could limit his food intake to 2,000 calories daily and lose two pounds a week safely. This same individual could use up 502 of these calories by walking three and one-half miles daily.

Having developed a taste for laziness that did not include a three-mile stroll, I suggested to myself why not reduce food intake to 1,500 calories and all would take care of itself. I would lose my eight pounds of unnecessary baggage in four weeks. That would allow plenty of time for me to trim down and squeeze into my old winter woolens.

For six weeks I clung to the 1,500-calorie diet except for a few steak dinner binges. Results: zero pounds and zero inches lost. Something was drastically wrong. Perhaps my middle-age metabolism was becoming ineffective.

I renewed by vices. Evidently wheat germ and gourmet cheeses were not appropriate substitutes for hamburgers and fries. I had really indulged myself in nothing except heaping platters of lime sherbet. Perhaps this appetizing filler would have to go the way of hamburgers. Worse yet, I might have to resort to lettuce and cottage cheese before I won the battle.

Worriedly, I reviewed the material in the encyclopedia. I could exercise away a 500-calorie malted milkshake during a 97-minute walk or a 61-minute bicycle ride or a 26-minute jog. These figures were precisely recommended for a 150-pound person. Anyone weighing 75 pounds would need to exercise twice that time. I became desperate since my poundage fell between the two examples.

Being a former rancher and farmer, the thought of walking or jogging was beneath my dignity. No self-respecting tractor driver or cowboy ever walked when he could transport himself on four wheels. Most certainly I did not intend to become one of the endangered species and ride a bicycle on the bumpy brick street in front of my home. Besides, I had no bicycle.

Evidently I would have to resort to outside assistance if I were able to enjoy my old clothes another season. Luckily an interesting sounding exercise center advertised for new members. A friend and I consulted with each other and decided to become dedicated to the organization.

Both of us were accepted by the club and entered our first day of class wearing beautiful purple leotards and tights that daringly accentuated our every bulge and sag. Our teacher looked at us as if we could be her slowest learners and least responsive to her guidance.

We would show her, we thought. At that moment we looked like little E.T. who was so drastically afflicted by Earth's gravitational forces. Nevertheless, we intended to prove to our teacher and to ourselves that our tenacity was iron-clad.

That first week we discovered that our muscles were completely atrophied with all elasticity evidently on a permanent leave of absence. The young ones, our delightful classmates, showed gracefulness and agility which we so sadly lacked during rhythmic exercises. I soon found that one-half mile on the stationary bicycle was the limit of my travels for one day.

However, my friend and I excelled in shaking and quivering when we took our turns with belts and rollers. Best of all, we were at the head of our class each day when it came time to race for the sauna. In that steamy enclosure we restored our egos as we basked our weary bodies in its soothing atmosphere.

Results of that first week proved successful. I removed one pound of baggage and nine inches of flab. We planned a delectable celebration with a ten-ounce Kansas City strip and all the trimmings.
I recently had my first encounter with the game of racket ball. The fact that I was totally unfamiliar with the game didn’t deter me from accepting my friend Mary’s invitation to play with her. After all, how difficult can it be to swat a little ball against a wall?

After a skimpy explanation of the rules, Mary suggested that we do some practice play. She heaved a service against the front wall which sliced a Z through the air as it ricocheted left-right-left and came to rest only after missing my nose by one-sixteenth of an inch. Standing studded and immobile before my smiling friend, I stammered an explanation about not being ready.

My first attempt to serve was followed by a hasty examination of my racket, which to my surprise was complete with strings. Ball two dribbled off the end of my racket and rolled gently to the wall before me. With my determination screwed down tightly, I prepared to return Mary’s serve. As I flailed the air in search of that elusive creature which seemed to calculate my every move, I somehow lost footing and took a thunderous spill that echoed back at me from every mocking wall.

I spurned Mary’s attempt to comfort my wounded ego and stood to my feet with a new strategy in mind. I would calmly watch the ball as it whizzed around the room; then I would carefully swoop my racket under it just as it bounced from the floor. My plan was a good one, but it backfired (literally) when Mary’s next service rebound bulleted directly toward me. I absorbed the blow graciously, forced a grimaced smile, fixed my gaze on the black, round monster lying motionless on the floor, and backed slowly from the room.
Wasting our resources is deplorable.
Neglecting our youth is unacceptable.

Doyle Jackson,
3501 E. Main, Weatherford, Oklahoma

"Wasting our resources is deplorable.
Neglecting our youth is unacceptable."

DIAL FREE ON 1-800-522-4466
Killing the Rooster

by Sheryl L. Nelms

Gramps held the rooster with his left hand and swung the ax with his right
the silver edge sliced clean and whumped into the elm stump where it stuck handle up the red-combed head lay staring off of the stump looking sideways across the garden at the bronze body flapping wings lunatic hopping that spurted blood and feathers out among the rows of green onions
THE BANK OF FRIENDLY SERVICE

HINTON TRUE VALUE HARDWARE

113 W. MAIN HINTON, OKLAHOMA

MEMBER F.D.I.C.

WESTVIEW

PATRONS

DRISCOLL FORD, INC.
Thomas, Oklahoma

KELLEY JEWELERS
Weatherford, Oklahoma

MARTIN FUNERAL HOME
Elk City, Oklahoma

ZIP TOOL COMPANY
Weatherford, Oklahoma

MAX'S GROCERY
Lawton, Oklahoma

VAN'S BOOK STORE
Cordell, Oklahoma

THE BOOKMARK
Elk City, Oklahoma

CHEYENNE STAR
Cheyenne, Oklahoma

WAG A BAG
Elk City, Oklahoma

DOUG'S INC.
Sentinel, Oklahoma

THE LOFT
Elk City, Oklahoma

BLACK KETTLE MUSEUM
Cheyenne, Oklahoma

HULSEY'S GROCERY
Carnegie, Oklahoma

McNEELY IGA
Geary, Oklahoma

JIM'S IGA
Watonga, Oklahoma

SECURITY BANK & TRUST CO.
Lawton, Oklahoma

DECK'S IGA
Thomas, Oklahoma

PUDDIN' LANE
Weatherford, Oklahoma

OLD TOWN MUSEUM
Elk City, Oklahoma
Winning first in the nation would usually be enough for any team to accomplish; however, for the Lady Bulldogs of Southwestern Oklahoma State University, winning once was not enough. These women practiced and worked together for many hours to produce a national championship basketball team two years in a row. In 1981 - 1982 and 1982 - 1983, the SOSU Lady Bulldogs moved from the run-of-the-mill university basketball team to the number-one team in the nation.

A new coach arrived on Southwestern's campus in 1981. This new coach named John Loftin brought with him, it seemed, a winning tradition. Loftin, a native of Tulia, TX, came to Southwestern after a successful record of 139 wins and 38 losses at Murray Oklahoma State Junior College. Loftin had led two different teams to the Oklahoma junior college championship during his stay at the junior college. Prior to his college coaching, Loftin began his coaching career in Claude, TX, where his record was 105-26. He also took his Texas teams to two Texas high-school state championships.

Along with Loftin, a new player from Thomas High School came into view, and the Lady Bulldogs were onto a winning season. Kelli Litsch from Fay remembers her first year playing for the Lady Bulldogs. "We were all apprehensive," said Litsch, "We were all new. We had a new coach and we didn't know how we'd play. But then we started winning and things just fell together."

Litsch was practically "brought up in a gym." She began playing basketball in the second grade and has since received such merits as All-American in high school and led Thomas to the State Championship finals.

After graduating from high school, Kelli was given offers to attend Oklahoma State University, Oklahoma University, and Louisiana Tech University, among others. However, she chose Southwestern over them all because, she stated, "It was close to home, I had friends here, and I always knew I'd come here."

Other freshmen also joined the Lady Bulldog squad to boost the women's team to fame. Jan Cheadle, known as "Cheese" Cheadle, came to SOSU after graduating from Carnegie High School. During her high-school years, "Cheese" received All-County, All-State, and All-Regional titles. She was also awarded the Most Valuable Player three years. Cheese decided to bring her talent to Southwestern and continue her career as a coach.

Cheese and Kelli were not the only freshmen on the 1982 championship team. Susan Pueschel also brought her talent to Southwestern after completing her high-school years in Fletcher.

More experienced players rounded out the top-ranked team and led the freshmen in a winning season. Sophomores on the team included Mindy Mayfield from Yukon and Anita Foster from Dallas, TX.

Mayfield joined with the Lady Bulldogs straight from high school, and Foster came as a transfer student from Steven F. Austin College. These two were an asset to the hopeful team.

Juniors on the winning team aided the underclassmen in experience and skill. Mary Champion, Vickie Seal, Susan Mounts, and Pat Jacques all played for the championship in Kemper Arena in Kansas City, MO.

Mary Champion transferred to Southwestern her junior year from Conners Junior College. Mary averaged eight points a game during the regular season. Mounts was also a transfer student from Northern Junior College in Tonkawa. Seal, a junior transfer, came to Southwestern after playing at Western Oklahoma State.

In March of 1982, these girls aided by Coach John Loftin, trainer Thel Shelby, and manager Demetrius Beacham, added the perfect ending to the so-called "Cinderella" season by winning the NAIA National Championship in Kansas City and doing it with a record of 34 - 0. The most outstanding score for the season was reached as the Lady Bulldogs defeated Panhandle State University, 107 - 53.

Before the women could travel to the National Championships, they successfully won the NAIA District Nine Championship and the NAIA Area Three Championship. After successfully attaining the NAIA National Cham-
During the 1982 National Championship games, the Lady Bulldogs scored 241 points in the national tournament, averaging 80.3 points a game and outscoring their opponents by a 27.6 margin. The Ladies also scored the most field goals in the tournament, 99.

As the 1981-82 basketball season came to an end, most of the girls were ready for a break from the sport; however, soon it was time again for the daily practices and workouts for the 1982-1983 season.

New freshman players such as Carie Kephart and Joanna Freeman brought new youth to the team for the second year. Kephart traveled from Canton to play with the Lady Bulldogs, and Freeman came from Moore.

Deana English rejoined the team as a sophomore. Her freshman year at Southwestern, she injured her knee and therefore decided to redshirt, or sit out that year and play it again. English graduated from Elmore City. Since she had played some with the Lady Bulldogs in the 1981-1982 season, English had experience with the championship team.

D.D. Woodfork from Seminole joined the Lady Bulldog team as a sophomore transfer. Woodfork had played for Loftin at Murray State Junior College, and once Loftin described her as being one of the "quickest and best jumpers I have ever seen." Along with Woodfork, Mary Scarlett from Clinton joined the team as a sophomore.

Theresa Patterson, a junior from Pittsburg, joined the women's team after transferring from Eastern Junior College in Wilburton. Coach Loftin described Patterson as being "the best shooter in Oklahoma junior colleges" the previous year.

The Ladies knew it would be a tough job winning the national championship two years in a row, but confidence prevailed. Coach Loftin described the 1982-1983 team as being "more experienced" than the previous season's team.

Kelli Litsch mentioned that the team had to be optimistic. She said that the competition was tougher and "every time we walked out on the court, they were trying to beat us because we were the National Champions of 1982." Kelli added that the team just had to "take one
The girls traveled through the 1982-1983 season with an almost clean record of 30-4, again traveling to Kansas City, and they became the NAIA National Champions for the second consecutive year.

For the second consecutive year, Kelli Litsch and Anita Foster were named to the NAIA All-Tournament Team. This year, another name, Mary Champion, also was added to that list. Litsch was named the Most Valuable Player for the second year, and the team brought home the sportsmanship trophy.

At the latter, Litsch managed to break three shooting records. By scoring 78 points in three games, she surpassed the previous record by 10 points. She broke the previous field goal record of 26 by scoring 28 goals and also broke the free throw record of 19 by scoring 22 free throws. She tied the previous record of free throws in a single game with 11.

Following the 1983 Championship, Mary Champion was asked to participate in the sixth annual East-West College All-Star Game. Litsch was named to play on the Kodak All-District Women's Basketball Team for District V of the Large College Division.

In 1984, the Lady Bulldogs are looking for yet another National Championship. Litsch said "This year's team is basically the same as last year's. We have many new players, but we know we'll be strong."

The team will be feeling the loss of Mary Champion, "Cheese" Cheadle, Deana English, and Susan Mounts in this year's quest for the title. The shoes of these players will be filled with the likes of Shorna Coffey, who is back after redshirting last season, freshmen, and transfers.

Leah Carpenter, a Butler freshman, is aiding the team with her talent, and she feels very confident about the season.

Others who are boosting the Bulldogs toward the championships include Carri Hayes, a junior college transfer from Latta and Elissia Fountain, a Dallas, TX transfer from Odessa Junior College. Hayes feels that the biggest problem this year will be adjusting to the other players. Hayes is ready to do all she can in the way of winning the title. "I'll do whatever I have to do to help the team go back to the nationals and have another winning season."

Desree Bowers, a junior transfer student from Oklahoma City University, will also aid the team with her talents in the coming season. Kim Fennelly, a Davenport, IA senior, and Nancy Hafterson, a Sonoma, CA sophomore, will join the team in January.

Everyone concerned with the team is optimistic about the coming season and the 1984 National championship games in Kansas City, MO. Thel Shelby, Coach Loftin's assistant coach, has her eyes on the top. Shelby predicted that the Lady Bulldogs will go all the way one more time. "We have basically the same starters as the two previous years, and if everyone has a good attitude and is in the right frame of mind, we can do it all again."

Jason Maxwell will serve the Lady Bulldogs as trainer this season, and Shelly Brown and Jan "Cheese" Cheadle will take care of the statistics. Beryl Siford will serve as manager.

Nineteen eighty four looks good for the Lady Bulldogs, and if all goes right, injuries don't get the team down, and the fans cheer the girls to victory after victory, they'll be in Kansas City to win their third consecutive NAIA National Championship.

[Editor's Note: As of December 7, 1983, the team had been reduced to eight members — Litsch, Foster, Coffey, Cheadle, Dees, Fountain, Mayfield, and Woodfork. Hayes was recovering from a knee injury, and Carpenter had left the team. But the Ladies were still 7-0 for the season.]
BANK OF HYDRO

Open Monday thru Thursday
9:00 am to 3:00 pm
Fridays 9:00 am to 5:00 pm
Drive-up Window Service

Bank of Hydro
Established 1903
Member F.D.I.C.

WESTVIEW

The First National Bank
MEMBER F.D.I.C.

Elk City, Oklahoma
Phone (405) 225-3434

First National Bank
MEMBER F.D.I.C.

Cordell, Oklahoma

Each depositor insured to $100,000

FDIC
FARMERS NATIONAL BANK

Cordell, Oklahoma

Member F.D.I.C.

HERITAGE

MEMBER F.S.L.I.C.

Savings & Loan

Elk City Cheyenne Hinton
School Days, where have you meandered?
Where have you gone, you turbulent, peaceful days? How many times has the sun shone down on the prairie sod on the easy Western slope that ambled on down to a wide but shallow canyon which sprang out in disarray — turning, twisting towards the light of day with the narrow, bordered Washita River only minutes away?

Where are you, twenty feet of grayish boards nailed together by hands that looked only ahead and up? Where are you, playgrounds, limited only by the distance we could run or fight or play thinking little of what might or might not come some other day?

Where are you, great teachers of a former day that pointed each one of us along the straight and narrow way hoping that every scrambled one of us would remember half the words they had tried to say?

Where are you, all tumbled together boys and girls by parents striving to feed and clothe you while Teacher tried to show you to throw back your shoulders and face the world and call the shots? They knew each one from the inside out of the motley lot.

May the good Lord in his wisdom and strength grant me a term of those long gone ways to live once more those turbulent-happy wishful never to be again Old School Days.
Chinook

by Sheryl L. Nelms

the chinook
blew in January
sent tin roofs
from cow sheds
sailing
into the Oklahoma sky
where they floated twisting and turning like kites
with broken tails

Tenting in the Oklahoma Panhandle.

by Sheryl L. Nelms

coyotes wake me
one yelp trills trails into the next
a ring of howls in the black surrounds me
the hunk of meat
in the middle
on the ground
Many years had passed, but as I read the article about Beatrice, my stomach tightened. All the old hurt ate at me. Dr. Beatrice Russell Longstreet has received the top Distinguished Alumni Award given each year by Jefferson State University. When I knew her in high school, she was also distinguished, but it was for being a terrible person who tried to cover up because her house had dirt floors, her mother was an obscene old gossip in greasy housedress, and her dad always stank because he took care of at least a hundred hogs on his farm and collected every piece of junk he could put his hands on. Most of the teachers at the Concord Consolidated School in Western Oklahoma thought of Beatrice as a rose, but she was more like a goathead or jimson weed or sandburr. I hadn’t attended that school all my life as Beatrice had, but it didn’t take me long after I transferred there in my junior year to find out how Beatrice operated in the school and how she had become a favorite. And all the other students tolerated her because it was easier than to fight against the system.

I remember being in Geometry class one day. I never did know why, but old Mr. Taylor, the teacher, always seemed to delight in embarrassing some of us. The way to crush me faster than any other was for someone to draw attention to my dad’s farming practices. There it was in the late 1940’s, and Dad was still farming with horses. Almost everyone else in the community was using tractors by then, everyone else except for my dad and old Lige Russell, Beatrice’s father. But the Russells didn’t live next to the highway as we did, so most people hadn’t paid much attention to Old Man Russell as he held on to the past. But there was always Daddy with his team right next to the highway when I got off the schoolbus each day. And Mr. Taylor was a successful farmer in his own right as well as a Math teacher.
On the day I remember, we weren't even talking about farming, but Mr. Taylor seemed to have his mind on it and managed to work around to it.

"Folks, farming is a big part of my life as well as teaching Math. I have to have farming to make a living as well as to keep pace with the community."

"But farming is a big expense nowadays," remarked Todd Myers behind his book.

"Yes, Todd, it is. I have thousands of dollars invested in my machinery alone. We're through with those simple days when all we had to do was throw a little fodder and provide drinking water for our horses."

"Not if your Jean's old man," someone in the back of the room mumbled as I felt my face burning with embarrassment.

"Why, yes, I don't suppose anyone in our community still holds to the outdated method of farming with horses." I pushed lower into my desk seat as my soul screamed within me. — Here it comes. He's sure to mention it again.

"Oh yes, your father still uses horses, doesn't he, Jean?"

I muffled a "Yessir" as anger flooded me. I wanted to scream aloud, "Why don't you ask about people who live in houses that have dirt floors or about people whose fathers collect junk and let it rust in their yards or about dirty mothers who wear the same greasy clothes all the time? Or why don't you mention that Old Man Russell still farms with horses too as that little snip hides behind her Geometry book and smirks at me? Or better yet, you nosey old lecher, why don't you ask me why Royce and I were parked on the dirt road near your driveway when you passed us last night and stared as you passed by? Why don't you just go ahead and slosh away every humiliating detail of my life?"

Beatrice was always a great one for giving "concerts" in the Gymnasium-Auditorium during the noon hour before basketball practice started. And so it was later on the day of the embarrassment during Geometry class. She sat at the piano and began to run her fingers over the keys. Not only couldn't she play the piano; she couldn't even play chords. So what came out was anything but musical, but that didn't stop her from singing to her own accompaniment. As she preened, she asked her audience, "Isn't that beautiful? Don't I have a wonderful voice?" I answered, "Not particularly."

As I walked into the girls' dressingroom one day to get ready for basketball practice, I was thinking about Beatrice. My mother, always a practical Christian, had been trying to reason with me about the terrible person. Beatrice, I was always talking about at home. She had suggested that Beatrice's snootiness toward her other classmates and me could be caused by her own feelings of displacement and inferiority. So I went in that day ready to try. Sure enough, there was Beatrice as usual. There were some eighth-grade girls there as I walked in, and Beatrice was putting on a show for them. I promised myself to try to be nice.
I struggled as I looked at Beatrice ogling in front of the mirror. She was stroking her naturally curly hair and rolling her eyes as she smiled into the mirror. With a kiss, she muttered, "Oh, Be, you are so beautiful! How is it possible for one girl in a small country school to have so much beauty and talent — as well as intelligence?"

The younger girls thought it was very funny to hear a high-school junior bragging on herself because they had never heard her before.

As I walked in, Beatrice turned to me and asked, "Jean, can you answer that question?"

"What question, Beatrice?"

"The question I just asked myself."

"Matthew, Mark, Luke, John, Acts, Romans." I reeled off a few books of the New Testament, hoping to be able to control my base nature as I turned to spiritual things. "I don't know, Beatrice. I guess we're just lucky."

"Oh, I suppose so."

"By the way, I've been meaning to ask you to spend the night with me after one of our basketball games. Could you do it tonight?"

"Oh, Jean, I'm sorry. I may be needed at home tonight. Mother's bridge club is meeting at the house for lunch tomorrow, and poor Mooter is a bit sickly this week.
Can you go down to your house to help your mother with her cleaning?"

"What will your mother say?"

"Oh, she may go along with us. She's been wanting to meet your mother any­
who had gone away with tales about Mrs.
Russell's showplace. Some of the nosier men had created excuses for going over there just to get in. In that country community, excitement of any kind was at a premium."

After school that afternoon, I told Mom
what I had done. "Jean, I'm very proud of you!"

"Why, Mom?"

"Because at least you're trying."

"But what if it makes no difference?"

"It will."

"Well, it hasn't yet!"

"Why do you say that?"

"Because she's still as snippy as ever."

"What did she do, Honey?"

"Oh, she made up some big lie about her mother needing her to help with the house."

"Maybe it wasn't a lie."

"After all we've heard?"

"Maybe it was gossip."

"But Mother, do you really think Beatrace's mother has a bridge club?"

"Is that what Beatrice said?"

"That's what she said!"

"Well, Honey, that's funny, but you must understand the girl's motivation."

"What, Mom?"

"Think about her anger. She's rare."

"How?"

"She was born into a family that has no
great objectives."

"Do you think Beatrice is like that too?"

"Certainly not! She's just waiting for her chance."

"Chance?"

"Yes ... her chance to get out."

"And then what?"

"She'll finish at the top of your class
— right?"

"Right."

"And then she'll leave."

"What do you think she'll do then?"

"She'll go somewhere and excel, and we won't hear anything else about her until
she has made a name for herself."

I had to "Yes, Mama" her, half believing her.

That night when we got on the bus to go to play our third conference game, Bea­ trace was still playing her role. "Well, I'm not really sure that I should go, Jean."

"Didn't you come prepared?"

"Yes, I brought my nightie, a toothbrush, and some clothes for tomorrow."

"Why, then?"

"Well, Mooter is really concerned about the house for tomorrow. You know how important these big social events are to parents."

"No problem. Beatrice. I'll just borrow the family car after the game tonight unless we're too tired to drag you and I can go down to your house to help your mother with her cleaning."

"What will your mother say?"

"Oh, she may go along with us. She's been wanting to meet your mother any­
who had gone away with tales about Mrs.
Russell's showplace. Some of the nosier
men had created excuses for going over
there just to get in. In that country community, excitement of any kind was at a premium."

After school that afternoon, I told Mom
what I had done. "Jean, I'm very proud of you!"

"Why, Mom?"

"Because at least you're trying."

"But what if it makes no difference?"

"It will."

"Well, it hasn't yet!"

"Why do you say that?"

"Because she's still as snippy as ever."

"What did she do, Honey?"

"Oh, she made up some big lie about her mother needing her to help with the house."

"Maybe it wasn't a lie."

"After all we've heard?"

"Maybe it was gossip."

"But Mother, do you really think Beatrace's mother has a bridge club?"

"Is that what Beatrice said?"

"That's what she said!"

"Well, Honey, that's funny, but you
must understand the girl's motivation."

"What, Mom?"

"Think about her anger. She's rare."

"How?"

"She was born into a family that has no
great objectives."

"Do you think Beatrice is like that too?"

"Certainly not! She's just waiting for her chance."

"Chance?"

"Yes ... her chance to get out."

"And then what?"

"She'll finish at the top of your class
— right?"

"Right."

"And then she'll leave."

"What do you think she'll do then?"

"She'll go somewhere and excel, and we won't hear anything else about her until
she has made a name for herself."

I had to "Yes, Mama" her, half believing her.
MEMORIES

The story of a Western Oklahoma athlete dying young.

John Stoakes: All-American basketball player who died young.

The tubes hurt my arms; my throat was so raw and cracked I knew I couldn't even cry. The quiet whiteness of the room scared me; the sturdy footsteps in the hallway were a million miles away enclosed in some mystic case. At first I was frigid; then I began to panic.

"Yuck," I thought. "You're the all-American kid; you gotta get hold of yourself and find out what's going on."

My head rocked as I tried to think. It was like someone was playing a joke on me — a long term joke — lasting forever. No matter how hard I tried, I kept seeing his face.

Going back, it had to have started on my twelfth birthday. My friends and I were pushing one another around in a backyard football game. An Atlas van pulled up to the vacant house next door, and after much scowling, two burly men began to unload. We watched as they struggled, and with hands tucked deep in our Levi pockets, we snickered knowingly at their cussing.

The next day in the middle of a storm that twisted my 10-speed into a coiled mess, the new neighbor arrived in his slick red Corvette. After the wind went down, Mom sent Dad and me to meet him with one of her apple pies. When the usual exchange of adult amenities had taken place, he turned to me, stretched out a long, thin hand, smiled and said, "Hello.

Man, were we impressed with his car; for awhile anyway, until dad told me the man, whose name was Karl Tilman, was a mortician. "Huh," I thought. "Just my luck to live next door to some fool that embalms stiff's."

All my buddies thought it was a joke too, and I got teased about a week before my temper flared, and I punched Joe square in the jaw and told him to keep his mouth shut.

The first Halloween after Tilman moved in, Joe, Frank, Herb, and I decided to have a little fun. Tilman spent a lot of time out in his yard, and before long, it began to look like a BETTER HOMES AND GARDENS lawn. We waited until after eleven to make sure my parents were asleep. Joe and Frank made Tilman's yard look like a Bourbon Street celebration by stringing miles of toilet paper from one end to the other. Every shrub and cedar took on a mummy-like appearance. Herb and I applied Colgate shaving cream to the windows and to the shiny Corvette.

And someone — I can't remember who — produced a few eggs.

We had a blast. As we were light stepping it back to my yard, we heard a strange whistling. There was Tilman standing on his back redwood deck staring right at us. He never made a sound and he never told our parents.

The next Halloween we waited until Tilman drove off in his fancy car, and then we demolished his yard. Just as we were standing back and admiring our work, we heard this strange whistling again. There, like a specter, was that strange man on his redwood deck, his stare searing our souls.

The very next day, November the first, our parents (perhaps, knowing the real culprits), shepherded us over as volunteers to assist in the restoration of the yard. Tilman never frowned, never complained; he just stuck out that long-fingered hand of his, smiled, and said, "Thanks, son, for coming over and helping me."

While we were retrieving miles of "teepeed" toilet paper, washing windows, and picking up a ton of bottles and cans, he just watched, whistled, and grinned. By the time we had served our retribution, I felt so slimy I went home and stood in a hot shower until Mom made me get out and turn off the water.

By the age of fifteen, I had given up playing jokes on Tilman, and my life revolved around basketball. I went to bed thinking basketball, dreamed about basketball, and woke up with it on my mind. I knew I was destined to be a star, watch out Magic Johnson, here comes John Stoakes, all-American boy.
American Kid
by Todd Winn

My sophomore year in high school, however, I did get a little sidetracked by Alice Ann. During our after-school basketball practices, the cheerleaders used to come into the gym and practice their cheers. Alice Ann was the prettiest girl I had ever seen. Her hair was straight, black, and hung down around her waist. Her body was just right, long and lean. Her Jordache jeans were molded for her body and turned to fluid when she walked. The first time I asked her out, I was a basket case, and even when she said yes, I didn't know what to do. Our first date would have been a disaster had Alice Ann not taken charge. She wasn't like the other girls I had known. Alice Ann had a calm assurance about herself, and she knew exactly what she wanted out of life.

After a few dates, we began to see each other all the time. She became my best friend, my lover, and my number-one supporter. With Alice Ann under control, my attention turned once again to full-time basketball.

By my senior year in high school, my life was neatly planned. I would play college basketball for O-State, turn down an offer with the pros, take over the family business, marry Alice Ann in St. Xavier Church, and have my own family. Life was just one ball game after another, one flattering sports article after another. And Mr. Tilman never seemed to miss a game, home or away. I would look up in the stands and find his eyes fixed on me. When he would catch my look, he always broke out in that confounded smile, flicked his long fingers in some type of greeting.

When Coach Floy called our first practice in October of my last year, I knew I had been hitting the Coors too hard over the summer. I just couldn't get in shape. I was always dogged tired, and I missed lay-up after lay-up. I shrugged it off and got a little better when I started munching a steady diet of B-12. Our team, the Rams, was ranked number one in the state, and I knew if we were going to stay on top through the state playoff, I had to stay healthy. One night after Mass I talked to Father Coady about how exhausted I felt all the time; he didn't seem too concerned and said I was letting my nerves get to me.

Every game became a nightmare, struggling to breathe, blinding headaches; the pressure began to mount. We were in the home stretch now. We were going into the final game of the regular season against arch rival Morrow Lucky Cardinals. At our first meeting in December, the game had ended 78 - 79, our favor. We had to win this game to be the undisputed conference champions and to go to District with a perfect win-loss record.

It was a see-saw game. Midway through the fourth quarter, we were behind two buckets. I went up for the rebound; my lungs became bricks; I couldn't swallow; I was choking on my own saliva; my head drummed; my last glimpse was of Tilman grinning at me from the stands.

The methodical dripping of fluid and a monotonous clicking of the machine woke me. The nurse spoke, "Hello, John, can you hear me? Squeeze my hand if you do."

"Of course, I can hear you. Who do you think you are asking me such stupid questions? Where am I?"

Mom stood beside the bed. Dad reached out, took my hand, and asked me how I felt.

"Will somebody please tell me what's going on?"

"John, I know you can't talk now. Dr. Mace will talk to you later when you feel better. He will explain. Try to go back to sleep now and get some rest."

"Man, I don't understand what this mess is all about."

In time, the white man with his dangling black stethoscope appeared. "John, I am Ron Mace. Three days ago you and I spent about five hours together in the operating room. John, I am Ron Mace. Three days ago you and I spent about five hours together in the operating room. John, you suffered multiple aneurysms. Do you know what that is?"

I managed a dim recollection of our biology teacher's reference to aneurysms and brain damage.
“We were able to stop the seeping, but we also discovered a tumor in the frontal lobe. We think the tumor probably created enough pressure to cause the aneurysms. John, your parents requested that I tell it to you just like it is; your dad said you were a man and could take it. The tumor we found is in such a place that we can’t get to it; in other words, it’s inoperable. We recommend chemotherapy treatment which could result in possible remission of the growth and prevent spreading. We can’t promise anything, but you are young and strong.” He droned on, his words lost in a maze.

“I'll fight everyone of you; I won't die. I'll show you. I won't take those stupid treatments. There's no way I'm going to turn yellow and lose my hair. I'm the all-American kid; my life is planned.”

Father Coady touched my arm. Here was my priest, my baptiser, my confessor, a Child of God. He would not lie to me; he would not join those who would betray me. He would offer me life and hope.

“Father,” I pleaded. “Tell them I am just tired.”

“John,” he began. “God gives us trials to make us strong; remember the story of Job. We must accept His plan for us. We cannot question His will.”

I was bewildered at his resignation and his willingness to accept this sentence of death.

“Father, how can you be on their side? Do all of you want me to die? I won't die! This is a joke — it's a dream. Man, I don't have cancer. I just got a little run down; I was meant to play basketball, to live...”

“John, remember Christ loves you and suffers for you. Let us pray together. Holy Mary, Mother of God, pray for us sinners now and at the time of our death.”

“Father, I don’t believe you. You can pray all you want. Just tell me this — where is Christ now? Is this evidence of His love for me?”

I knew Alice Ann would come and straighten out this mess. She always had a way of getting straight to the truth, and she had a knack for putting people in their places. She would handle this for me. She loved me and understood me. She didn’t want me to die; our lives were planned.

It was years before they let my friends visit me. When they came, Alice Ann led the pack. As soon as she bent over to kiss me, I knew something was wrong; she had changed. She believed the lies; she was part of the conspiracy to make me believe I was going to die.

Joe, Frank, and Herb wouldn’t even look at me. They stood across the room and weaved from one foot to the other. They were together in this: my parents, my friends, my Church, the doctors, the nurses, the hospital; they were all plotting against me. But why? I had never done anything any other kid hadn’t done. I went to Mass. I even went to Confession when I didn’t forget. Every once in awhile, I got a little out of hand, but never anything really bad.

And then I had the answer. Why didn’t I think of this before? This was a stupid dream. I had been in tight spots before — even dreamed of dying before — and then woke up and went about my life. Any minute now, Mom would walk through that door and say, “John, if you are going to make it to basketball practice on time, you’d better roll out. And, John, you forgot to carry out the trash last night.”

I began to feel better; man what a relief. Just a stupid dream. I even felt like whistling “Dixie” as my grandpaw used to say when he felt good. All I had to do was just lie back and wait until good old Mom came in to sound her good morning. It’s sure strange how a dream can scare the wits out of a person. The tubes and the needles didn’t even seem to hurt anymore. I began to doze.

The door opened slowly, quietly; I turned; standing there was Karl Tilman, the smiling mortician.

“Hello, son,” he said with that confounded smirk on his face. He walked over to the bed and reached his long, slim fingers out to me.
WESTVIEW GALLERY
FEATURING WORK FROM SOUTHWESTERN UNIVERSITY ART STUDENTS.

Larry Hill

Susan Huckleberry

Robin Bridwell

J. VanOrsdol
GALLERY

Jeff Dodd

Angela McCarty

Larry Hill

Cindy Moore
L. R. Sights, President

Clinton, Oklahoma

WEATHERLY RCA
"The" RCA Store

124 WEST BDWY.
P.O. BOX 792
ELK CITY, OKLAHOMA
73648
405/225-3422

Southwest STATE BANK
SENTINEL, OKLAHOMA