

Documentary Film on Horny Toads to be Screened at SWOSU

01.24.2013

"Where Did the Horny Toad Go" will be the focus of a film screening and talk at the SWOSU Department of Biological Sciences Seminar Series this Wednesday, January 30, at 4 p.m. in Room 212 of the Old Science Building. SWOSU graduate Stefanie Leland wrote, directed and produced the film. Admission is free and the public is invited.

Stefanie and Beau Leland, a pair of independent filmmakers, will be featured as part of the Southwestern Oklahoma State University Department of Biological Sciences Seminar Series this Wednesday, January 30, at 4 p.m. in Room 212 of the Old Science Building.

Admission is free and the public is invited.

The documentary film, entitled "Where Did the Horny Toad Go," investigates the dramatic decline in populations of the Texas horned lizard that was once common in Oklahoma. The Lelands will give a brief introduction to their film followed by a screening. They will be available to answer questions after the film. Film merchandise, including t-shirts and DVD's, will be available for purchase.

Stefanie Leland grew up in western Oklahoma and is a 2003 SWOSU graduate with a Bachelor of Science degree in Biology. She wrote, directed and produced the film along with Beau, who directed the cinematography, edited and narrated the film.

For more information on this presentation and upcoming seminars in the series, contact Dr. Steven O'Neal at 774-3091 or steven.oneal@swosu.edu.
