

SWOSU Students Win Prizes by Completing Title IX Training

02.16.2017

Three Southwestern Oklahoma State University students recently won prizes for completing Title IX online training on the Weatherford campus.

All students are annually invited by President Randy Beutler to complete the training.

The Dean of Students Office sweetened the pot by adding in three prizes given at random to those completing the TIX online class. Winners were Leroy Ngo of Oklahoma City, Rose Jamorion Montrell of Waxahachie (TX) and Joshua VanTuyl of Porter.

The winners could choose from a Yeti, iPad, iPod, TV or Fridge.

"Our ongoing TIX trainings add to overall campus safety," said SWOSU Director of Activities and Organizations Jordan Selman.

"We share a special 'Town and Gown' relationship in this community," said Dean of Students Cindy Dougherty. "The seamless cooperation and care for our students by the Weatherford and SWOSU Police Departments helps keep us in the top 3% of Safest Campuses in America."

Dougherty said there will be another random drawing on May 1 for the same list of prizes. To enter, a student needs to only complete the online training which was e-mailed to all of them from "WorkplaceAnswers." The graduation certificate will need to be printed and dropped off in the Dean's office, Stafford 214. Winners will be announced May 2.
