Vigil Chorus

by

Meg Moseman

On this, the longest of all nights, the song within this hall sustains the fire, the marble globe, our singing selves, and all.
Our robes shine red and blue and green; our voices weave the world.
To night or nothingness the rest must fall.

We act, and are, our God Most High. In our polyphony one voice becomes the next, one rises as one falls, all free of cold identity. Here peace is flame, and flame's unfurled peace. These heights permit no tragedy.
