

5-1-2017

About the Postcard Above My Desk

Helen Wickes

Follow this and additional works at: <https://dc.swosu.edu/westview>

---

Recommended Citation

Wickes, Helen (2017) "About the Postcard Above My Desk," Westview: Vol. 33 : Iss. 1 , Article 2.
Available at: <https://dc.swosu.edu/westview/vol33/iss1/2>

This Poetry is brought to you for free and open access by the Journals at SWOSU Digital Commons. It has been accepted for inclusion in Westview by an authorized administrator of SWOSU Digital Commons. For more information, please contact phillip.fitzsimmons@swosu.edu.

About the Postcard Above My Desk

by Helen Wickes

I'm sure it was meant to get me writing, but I don't think Mr. Samuel Beckett cares if another word gets written. He makes me want to break every pen in the house, put on a hat, and walk. For years. Until my shoes wear out, until everyone I know has died, until the world is completely unrecognizable.

I didn't give him this power. He took it word by word. I tell him, Look at your funny ears, your coat's too big, your hair's a wreck.

Some days I call him Sam, or Monsieur. Or to get his goat, which someone's got to do, Macushla, the Irish for dear, but mostly it's Beckett.
I like the coldness. And the echo of Peter O'Toole bowing his head at the altar. Knowing they're coming to get him. Of course I could remove the card, but this guy would haunt me from any drawer or pocket. This character thinks he runs the show. He stares down, bemused, unmoved if I read a cheesy magazine or go to the window to mourn the robin's egg crushed on the pavement. I tell him the sky is blue, but what's a sky to a guy in eternity.

Look at the world you left, old man. We're here, your lost children, listening for a sign.