"We're excited to have these students in the program," said SWOSU-Sayre Radiologic Technology Director Jess Parker.

According to Parker, program admission is competitive. The 13 students who were admitted were selected from a large pool of individuals who submitted applications and sat for interviews before a panel of medical and educational professionals.

The two-year Radiologic Technology program includes classroom instruction as well as on-site clinical experience. Students eventually sit for a national certification exam.

The fall semester begins August 24, and enrollment for all classes is underway.
