TATTOOED

by

David Sparenberg

I carry the world and the biography of history tattooed into my soul.

I carry images of wars, the nightmare horrors of suffering and shame: blood spilling into my eyes.

I carry the images of love, the aesthetics of union and the beauty of two women - one for the daylight of ascending sun, one for the night time of dreaming moon.

I am tattooed
with the birthdays of life and death, with memorials of children growing from seed,
with the cycles of many seasons and all my relations.

I am tattooed
with road signs and footsteps of red path earthwalks and the waste of whirlwind and rattling thorns.

My soul is inscribed with the constitution of my immortality,
by this hand of experience and with a prayer
from the breath of God.
