"Horse Chant"

by

Joey Madia

Thru the chorus night grasshopper and cicada weave strands of flutelike wonder.

The mystic mandala,
keep of the Heavens,
sings to earth with stars.

In his corral
the master's horse awakens.
Heart astir, he hears the sounds of his wild brothers charging toward the sea.

Wild, unbridled,
his fractured mind leaps the splintered fence of his captivity
and seeks association in the chorus night.

White Wolf, river guide, maker of pollen and arbiter of harvest with juniper staff and eagle's wing waves his soul in the horse's eye asking the slave horse, "Take me home."

With seasalt in his nostrils and snare-raps in his ears Horse adds new hues to the mystic mandala, hoof-plowing the earth for the new year's seed.

White Wolf, mane in hand, rides for Heaven at the head of the herd.

On the glowing edge of the chorus night White Wolf dances to the flutelike meditations cicada sings in stillness as Horse brings in the corn.
