

6-15-2009

A Total Eclipse

Teresa Sutton

Follow this and additional works at: <https://dc.swosu.edu/westview>

 Part of the Fiction Commons, Nonfiction Commons, Photography Commons, and the Poetry Commons

Recommended Citation

Sutton, Teresa (2009) "A Total Eclipse," Westview. Vol. 29: Iss. 1, Article 17.
Available at: <https://dc.swosu.edu/westview/vol29/iss1/17>

This Poetry is brought to you for free and open access by the Journals at SWOSU Digital Commons. It has been accepted for inclusion in Westview by an authorized administrator of SWOSU Digital Commons. For more information, please contact phillip.fitzsimmons@swosu.edu.

A Total Eclipse

by Teresa Sutton

You are wrong to think it is the full moon that turns men into werewolves and also wrong to think only men are turned.

In my yard in the shadow of our keep, I stood to watch the moon in broad day upstage the sun, cover that golden disc with its own circle of black night. Beside our pond, I spied two wolves. Next I knew my husband was between me and them.

They pounced. I hollered. Teeth were all over. Blood oozed in waxing crescents at each wolf bite. I looked to my husband.

Fur surged out of his face. His mouth swelled to a muzzle, feet to paws. My insides were butter on a hot day right before it gives up, pools in a plate. Muscles in my arms contorted. My palms thickened to callous pads, fingers shrunk, sharpened to claws.

The two wolves writhed on the ground, snouts covered in our blood, their fur fell off in clumps, bodies exploded with human limbs.

They stood, embraced each other, turned tenderly to us, explained the curse. We stayed on the ground, watched them walk down our manor road until they were out of sight. Then we looked up, studied the slow play of the sun and moon until the moon let go.

