Finds the Path Mourns

Robert Cooperman

Follow this and additional works at: https://dc.swosu.edu/westview

Part of the Fiction Commons, Nonfiction Commons, Photography Commons, and the Poetry Commons

Recommended Citation

Available at: https://dc.swosu.edu/westview/vol28/iss2/38 Hair Filled With Sun died today.
I hoisted her into a tree, so she can fly off easy to the Land of Plentiful Game.

Sometimes, when she thought I wasn’t looking, she’d sigh for a bath or a new dress, or her Boston childhood, or even that gold hell-town I took her from.

Still, she swore she wouldn’t trade our wandering for anything.
Then she’d hold me tight and sing she loved me more than her own breath or the kids she couldn’t have.

Hair Filled With Sun,
I named her. She said
I was a natural poet;
she took to snaring game like she’d been a fox before she was a woman, could stitch our leggings and tunics finer than a Lakota squaw.

Just let me see her again:
in her preacher Pa’s heaven, or my poor Ute mother’s Land of Plentiful Game, or in Hell, but together;
even if we’re old
and wrinkled and useless, except to each other.