Wanting Too Much

by Gerald Zipper

Nobody admits it
but it hurts
like a stabbing cavity in a tooth most of us want to be someone else or something else
or somewhere else we know we're being foolish but we crave it many play at sleight of hand waving wands and conjuring illusions expecting something to appear out of nothing many hunger for acclaim dig about in vacant soil scratch for shiny bones demand their places in the sun refuse to abide ordinariness ignore the stiff price to be paid after all it's not a crime wanting too much is not a punishable offense or is it?
