ANNWYN CASTLE

by Owen R. Neill

The castle turns and turns westerly, gleaming westerly, all glass and radiating rainbows.
Its towers rise into transparency like the smoking blue of dying fire.
No doors or gates loom landward.
No man purely mortal may enter Until the gods have touched his eyes and then god-sight will raise the way.
Sentinels without faces blend light with light upon the ramparts, dumb in their never ceasing revolution as the castle turns and turns
westerly, gleaming westerly,
all glass and radiating rainbows.

Two squares within two squares seeming, only seeming real,
all glass and radiating rainbows.
Yet deep inside there is a feasting and revelry where none grows old.
The choicest riches fills all rooms and those who dwell there fill their ears with poetry and inspiration, wisdom and deep prophecies from the pearl-rimmed cauldron of the gods.
Nine British pythonesses breathe to keep forever bubbling the oracle which transposes itself upon the wind, gives hope to men who come without to know the secrets of their faith.
There, in hope, they call with horns beyond two squares within two squares,
seeming, only seeming real,

DRAGON SOL

by Rhea Rose

the golden blood of gods pounds in your core, searing sea of molten force blazing breath raw licks that scorch and beat upon our shield

crown sphere of heat set upon us burning, your chaotic spotted soul flares and strikes the night singed, darkness hisses in your path and borealis born

your spirit shimmers, the heavens warmly swept

EYE OF MIRANDA

whose lightless watch and silent cyclic trek alludes to clashing eons, the billion battles wrung and won to wax with Ariel Umbriel and Oberon

Beyond that black cycloptic gaze your stone soul
tends to flecks titanic, ice cliffs the chevron scars mute scores of chilling song made colder by deep dark distance

Into that night
of tumbled mysteries, locked in frozen tears, clenched in stone where tidal heat once thrust a spark clandestine flock has passed.

Your dark eye dreams of dark and rings Uranus unperturbed by sight but your mysteries, unbound, combine and in that light you wane and wait
eternal stare and stir of time
