The Sunken Shore

A poem by Manuel Waldesco Balaguer-Cortés

The sea will sing her last true song.
She will start slowly, knowing that ebb and tide will sing along with voice of spray.
The day will dance and whirl the dawn until the shifting light
of night,
the moon, will look last time upon the once most noble and delightful shore.
No more
Under the silent sea, great island of the west, you are gone.

Flier, by Meg Moseman
