

6-15-2000

Domesticity

Dale M. Kushner

Follow this and additional works at: <https://dc.swosu.edu/westview>

Recommended Citation

Kushner, Dale M. (2000) "Domesticity," Westview: Vol. 19 : Iss. 2 , Article 11.
Available at: <https://dc.swosu.edu/westview/vol19/iss2/11>

This Poetry is brought to you for free and open access by the Journals at SWOSU Digital Commons. It has been accepted for inclusion in Westview by an authorized administrator of SWOSU Digital Commons. For more information, please contact phillip.fitzsimmons@swosu.edu.

Domesticity

by Dale M. Kushner

When the fields outside town have been twice disked, and the furrowed black earth is scoured with light, cattle get brazen.
The warming ticks of March gentling down their flanks sets them to lather and kick at the slightest knuckle of wind, as though spring-sun could lift the anchor of their domesticity and ancestor ghosts come loosened in their blood.

A farmer's fortune is hobbled by luck: gentle rains and beveled sunlight can easily slip back under the icy coma of a March sky.

But season after season, each day is the same:
the farmer drives the herd over muddy tractor ruts to a split-oak gate where the largest cow lows and lows to be let out into pasture.

Night after night, slung against his barnwood door, he counts their return—the single-file cortege—their headhulks obediently lowered for stanchioning.

He must shackle them before a slice of moon can hook itself into the blackness of their eyes, rouse anarchy in their bones. As once, in winter, mucking out a starlit barn, he heard his girls begin to stamp and moan in their stalls, their silver breath

so hot, if he'd touched it, he'd be burnt forever.

Photo by Joel Kendall

