Rape of The Hobbit

Come to Middle Earth - An Original Musical reported and reviewed by Fred Brenion

As most members of The Mythopoeic Society probably know by now, a musical play has been touring the Southern California area, based on The Hobbit by J.R.R. Tolkien. This play, entitled "Come to Middle Earth," was produced and directed by Fred and Don Bluth. It and others are sponsored by the various P.T.A.'s which are in affiliation with the Junior programs of California, and are created for an audience, ages 6 to 13.

I attended the performance at Santa Monica High School's Barnum Hall on January 18th at 1:30 p.m. After buying my ticket, I made my way into Barnum Hall and took a seat in the Balcony, little knowing what was to come.

The play was supposed to be based on The Hobbit, but there were hardly any similarities between the book and the play. The play left out Smaug, Beorn, Gollum and the Dwarves, the Elves, most of the other characters of The Hobbit. This play was a giant time covers of The Lord of the Rings. The hobbits, known as Poke, look or act like hobbits. Only scenery is a giant tine of The Lord of The Rings. Enter three Hobbits, known as Poke, Put, and Scratch. They didn't look or act like hobbits. They came out with a song and an introduction. Then came a girl looking like Poke. Put and Scratch sing a song about the hobbits and their girl, but she announces that she loves your hero and mine, Bilbo. Then comes the big news: half-wolf (Bilbo) have stolen the hobbits' magic Ring. Everyone leaves the stage except Bilbo. Gandalf then comes in and asks if Bilbo would like to get the Ring back. Bilbo declines on the ground that he is not the hero type. He then gets a tour of his mind to show him all his fears are all in his head. Once he gets into his mind (the play form this point is a bit confusing) he meets four weird characters known as Flip, Aphrodite, and butterflies 1 and 2. I am not sure what they all represent, something sinister I think. I was told that butterflies are used as a symbol for marijuana, among other things. He has a few adventures in his brain. At one point Aphrodite and the butterflies try to seduce him (h'mm). This whole episode was as if Bilbo was on a trip. He soon gets out of there and meets the wargs and their King called Voulfgone, who has the Ring. They then capture continued on p. 48 something you have been accustomed to all your life...". And finally, "...how queer, thought the King,...that a thing which makes one person laugh should make another scream and shiver."

OTHER BOOKS RECEIVED:

Regrettably, we received the following Ballantine Adult Fantasy books too late to be able to review them for this issue of Mythlore:

Peter S. Beagle, The Last Unicorn
Peter S. Beagle, A Fine and Private Place
Both are $0.95 paperbacks.

Bilbo. The people in Bilbo's mind come by and everybody sings a song. Then Bilbo seizes the Ring and they all have a merry chase scene. Bilbo soon realizes that all these things are happening in his mind. So Bilbo with the power of his mind, gets rid of his adversaries, goes home a hero, puts the Ring on Phoebe's finger, and he is known as the Lord of the Ring(s). The end at last!

Now that we are all thoroughly sick, I for one, would like to know what should be done about plays like this. I'm not sure but I think to put on a play based on the book you would have to have the rights from the publishers to do such a project. If this is so, then the publishers should see to it that the thing does not get out of hand. There may be other solutions. Any ideas on Tolkien based plays should be sent to such interested organizations such as the Tolkien Society of America and The Mythopoeic Society. I am very disappointed in this play. It's really a shame because a good play could do so much in bringing Tolkien to the greater public. Let us hope the future will produce some plays that will capture the true Tolkien flavor.
