On J.R.R. Tolkien's The Lord of the Rings

David S. Berkeley

Follow this and additional works at: https://dc.swosu.edu/mythlore

Part of the Children's and Young Adult Literature Commons

Recommended Citation

Available at: https://dc.swosu.edu/mythlore/vol14/iss3/18

This Poetry is brought to you for free and open access by SWOSU Digital Commons. It has been accepted for inclusion in Mythlore: A Journal of J.R.R. Tolkien, C.S. Lewis, Charles Williams, and Mythopoeic Literature by an authorized editor of SWOSU Digital Commons. An ADA compliant document is available upon request. For more information, please contact phillip.fitzsimmons@swosu.edu.

To join the Mythopoeic Society go to: http://www.mythsoc.org/join.htm
On J.R.R. Tolkien's The Lord of the Rings
to show, that the real world is an unknown world beyond, a world found in death. In his fantasies, however, he could provide a space for this world and replace the reader's world with a fictional world that becomes real. The reader, MacDonald hopes, will read Phantastes as Anodos reads the books in fairyland—MacDonald wants the reader to participate in the story, to realize that multiple realities exist, to realize that fairyland and dream are real, that death is the final reality and a new life. The self-conscious and self-reflexive fictional worlds in Phantastes draw attention to the fact that the stable bases of a coherent reality normally found in realistic novels are very unstable. MacDonald's fantasy world allows for multiple realities to exist simultaneously. In his study of Peter Beagle's Last Unicorn as meta-fantasy, R.E. Foust places Beagle alongside Barth, Coover, Gass, and Pynchon as writers who use metafiction to expand the rigid constraints dictated by the conventional realistic novel (p. 5). Phantastes was written in 1858. Beagle essentially was doing what MacDonald had done a hundred years earlier. MacDonald's self-reflexive myth-making, his brand of metafiction or meta-fantasy, is peculiarly modern in technique. Phantastes is very modern in its narrative experimentation, a complex interaction of multiple fictional worlds, a fact that has not yet been recognized or adequately explored.

Bibliography

On J.R.R. Tolkien’s

The Lord of the Rings

Sun-hating, Doom-drumming, strange-flesh-eating
Orcs beyond numbering, with saw-toothed knives
And Legs iron-shod, effluvia-secretng,
Vile of speech, vilier of sport, snuffing lives
Even of orc-filths, long red tongues extruding
From flat, slant faces, coal blood fired to kill
But inly fearing the Red Eye unhooding,
Trained on the true by leather-winged Nazgul,
Lope west from Mordor’s mirk and blackened spire,
Where violated soil brings forth no food,
To Gondor, Lorien, Rohan, and the Shire,
Whose free hearts, clear streams, and the Golden Wood
Are spared, dread Sauron’s Ring in Mount Doom’s bore.
Can this vast spell be spelled? Casts it coming war?

David S. Berkeley