Three Artistic Versions of 'The Death of Glorfindel'

Sarah Beach, Patrick Wynne and Paula DiSante

As a special artistic treat in this issue, we give you three versions of "The Death of Glorfindel." This project began with an idea from Paula DiSante, who suggested to her friends, Pat Wynne and Sarah Beach, that each of them attempt independent renderings of an agreed subject. The idea was put forward at Mythcon in Vancouver, where a fourth party (one Paul Nolan Hyde) selected the subject. The choice was made by eliminating often-done scenes such as "The Mirror of Galadriel." The basic passage ("The Death of Glorfindel") was first presented November 24th, 1955. It has been printed in Of Other Worlds, 59-73. Subsequent references to this volume are given in the text.

Sarah Beach: My rendering of "The Death of Glorfindel" is actually for the moments before the event, the about-to-happen moments. I limited the figures to Glorfindel and the Balrog because I wanted to focus on the conflict of good and evil. Also, I rendered them without weapons, focusing on the spiritual nature of the battle. I suspect I was influenced in this by what Gandalf says to Frodo in Return of the King: "You saw him for a moment as he is upon the other side." (FR, p.294)

Patrick Wynne: My depiction of "The Death of Glorfindel" closely follows the account given in The Book of Lost Tales, Part Two, p. 194. Using a highly stylized approach seemed a good way to echo visually the pseudo-archaic, mannered prose of BoLT, and it gave me an opportunity to indulge my love of curvilinear forms. Styilization also made it easier to achieve the sense of space I was after — the sweeping curves of the chasm walls, as though viewed through a fish-eye lens, convey (I hope) a feeling of vast height which would have been difficult to portray with a more realistic technique. The curling plumes of smoke owe more than a little to Tolkien's rendition of the campfire in his illustration "The Trolls" for The Hobbit (see Pictures by J.R.R. Tolkien, No. 2), and there are other visual references to the work of certain current Tolkien fan-artists (I will let you figure them out for yourselves). I felt there would be a great deal of dramatic potential in depicting not simply the death-plunge of Glorfindel and the Balrog but the death-plunge a split second before its noisy, and no doubt messy, conclusion. My Balrog is a rather corporeal-looking creature, more like a gigantic Orc than the dimly-glimpsed horror of fire and shadow described in "The Bridge of Khazad-dûm," and this is in keeping with the description of these monsters in BoLT (cf. Joe Abbott's article in ML 59). My love of the Elvish languages led me to include as an integral part of the composition a panel describing the

Each of the artists has written a brief description of what contributed to his or her picture. The descriptions are given in the order of the dramatic sequence (see pages 21, 39 and the back cover). We hope you will enjoy the results of this project.

Can one human being bear the Glory of God to another? Williams says yes — because the first and great Incarnation allows for all our lesser imaging and because that great and eternal co-inherence of the Trinity is the pattern for all our lesser co-inherences. As Beatrice’s eyes reflect the two-natured Griffin, “Romantic Love is seen to mirror the Humanity and Deity of the Redeemer” (Williams, 106). This divine and human experience is the goal and method of Williams’ Theology of Romantic Love.

For those not conversant with the tengwar or Quenya, a transcription of the panel in the English alphabet with translation is provided. (Pat himself translated the English of BoLT into Quenya. —SB)

Now Glorfindel and the Balrog quarrelled upon that peak above the people. The Wrath of Glorfindel send the Balrog Flying from point to point, the hero protected from fiery lash and iron claw by golden mail. Now he battered the creature’s iron helm, now hewed away its whip-arm at the elbow. Then the Balrog, filled with fear, leaped towards Glorfindel, who stung like the dart of a snake, but he only found a shoulder, and the Balrog seized him. Then Glorfindel’s left hand found a dagger, which he trust upward to pierce the creature’s bosom, and the fiery monster roared in pain and fell backwards from the peak, seizing the warrior’s golden hair beneath the helm; and both fell into the abyss. Lo! The echo of their fall leaped through the hills and filled the abyss of Thorin Sir.

(The Variant Quenya forms for “Balrog” were coined by Tolkien himself, used here as synonyms for variety’s sake.)

Paula Di Sante: This version of the “Death of Glorfindel” reflects my interest in depicting physical and emotional aftermath. In other words, I like to show what happens after everything happens. The description of Glorfindel’s battle with the Balrog in The Silmarillion is quite brief — a mere two paragraphs that are very slim on specifics. So it was a creative challenge to provide visual detail that is not described in the text. I see Glorfindel as a “sacrificial savior” figure, and so took my inspiration from the Deposition of the Cross paintings of Peter Paul Rubens and Jacopo Pontormo. These paintings, however, were not so much compositional influence as they were emotional ones. Along with Glorfindel, the other characters portrayed here are Tuor, Idril, the young Earendil, an unnamed elf of Gondolin, and the tail and talons of Thorondor.

Mythlore 60
Page 25

Over the years Mythlore has published a large amount of highly praised mythopoeic artwork. Few people are inclined to cut up their issues of Mythlore in order to frame these pieces for their walls. Therefore, Mythlore has begun a series of portfolios reproducing various pieces on quality paper suitable for framing. A limited number of portfolios are now being offered containing copies signed and numbered by the artists.

Signed portfolios are $25.00
Unsigned portfolios are $15.00
Included in the first portfolio are the following pieces:

“Meditation of Mordred”
(Williams) by Sarah Beach (from Mythlore 39)
“Trostplight at Cerin Armoth”
(Tolkien) by Paula DiSante (from Mythlore 45)
“The Mistress of the Silver Moon”
(MacDonald) by Nancy-Lou Patterson (from Mythlore 21)
“Till We Have Faces”
(Lewis) by Patrick Wynne (from Mythlore 39)

Each Portfolio comes in a folder with Patrick Wynne’s “Triskelion” (from Mythlore 35) printed on the cover. The artwork is reproduced on 9” x 12” sheets, and are suitable for framing. Please specify whether you want a signed or unsigned portfolio. Send your order to:
