

7-15-1993

Learning from Mother

Holly Hunt

Follow this and additional works at: <https://dc.swosu.edu/westview>

---

Recommended Citation

Hunt, Holly (1993) "Learning from Mother," Westview: Vol. 12 : Iss. 4 , Article 16.
Available at: <https://dc.swosu.edu/westview/vol12/iss4/16>

This Poetry is brought to you for free and open access by the Journals at SWOSU Digital Commons. It has been accepted for inclusion in Westview by an authorized administrator of SWOSU Digital Commons. For more information, please contact phillip.fitzsimmons@swosu.edu.

Learning from Mother

BY HOLLY HUNT

I will tell you that my mother was smart, a wire-cutting wit that could snap everything midair and bring pause to all voices there.
And in that pause would form a certain space in every thought, when she would say something so accurate that all ears would leap, heads tilted to the Common Philosophy Lady:
listen. . . did we hear the delicate click of the Wheel? Hush. It was truth and heaven in her words and the exact colors of all birds that made everyone barely smile even though life is not really funny.
And sometimes she was a cat holding truth by the tail so softly in her mouth and then she kept a silent distance the way some people do after they softly lie.
And this is not disgusting, so the cat rides.

There was always near the middle of my mother's sight some little explosion in the air.
So fast it flashed that she could never really swear that it was there, but this was followed with some catchy solid notion that could hang for years like a dangling holiday ornament, maybe one made of sequins and straight pin eyes,
looking like it escaped from the state asylum.

I will say my mother made me smart for that is what she'd tell me to tell you.
For every moment she batted away my hand from the electric sockets! Teaching me things on a long term scale.
How immediate came the longtime lesson, advanced with her hovering promise of truth.
She might command me to Jump! Learn by chance because there are steps, whole flights of them, that are often leaped.
She could also lay a featherweight measuring stick across the top of my head so I could feel balance.

Teaching was her profession. The complete statement.
The icicle facts of sharp quick-melt Comedy, or Tragedy never crumbling but slicing like the guillotine dropping down through her class as she stood in her classroom made serious by Juliet or Hamlet:

you knew that prince had arrived by the utter following lack of sound.

From only my heart I recall her earliest lessons to me:
words of love spoken to brilliant living things that a higher spirit made: the azaleas, the trees, the wind, the snow, the falling leaves.
And I would have a cymbal of leaves and we would dance many unplanned steps, and then a hop or two would come at the break of thought. My mother was Helenic in her father a herdsman and in my father a fisherman's day.

And now. She is the sharp timeless needle filed by way of a hardwon beauty.
She can step down and mend me and rise into heaven again.

The sight of her is clearer and closer to me even than was the practical work of her mind.
Her logical voice grew closer, then farther, then closer again, and way out again swinging on her own trapeze, her trick.
When she died, I saw her let it go.
What she knew about giving up life was that it is hard sometimes, that's all, with not one friend from earth or heaven to be with you and then you fall into the dark where other lessons are learned.

Some of us will live knowing nothing, no helpful recollections of a Heaven will ever stretch between, but if one will believe, as she would insist, always believe, such a cord of remembering might stretch to you once or twice in your life.

And even though she knew enough to teach me this by talking to the grass, some things happened to her that were unfair, like dying too early in the middle of a happy life.
When healthy death came, she only gave him one helping.
He was not allowed dessert, yet he was not full, either.
He was only an authority figure in grey and black.
Give him his minute of respect, and then leave.
Oh do not treat him without a measure of sympathy.
Because there are angels that can blow him away by holding to their mouths wooden duck callers or by howling into the mountainside, and they help us out often enough.■