Winter Scene

NORTH OF CHEYENNE

By Marj McAlister

Locked in by winter's firm embrace the old ranch house rests in the snow.
Its chimney smoke is curling low above a blanket of soft lace.

No caller passes through the gate;
barbs on the fence wear coats of glass.
The ancient well is frozen fast and half-white branches are sedate.

The barn lies back of a smooth drift against a background of stark white.
On the outhouse path to the right
no footfall yet has made a rift.

Where the South Canadian bends around the broad Antelope Hills Western Oklahoma is still:
Here, north of Cheyenne, time suspends.
