Down At The Farm

Fran Merrill
The snow begins at daybreak powdering house and barn and meadow--muffling morning sounds chilling morning air.
My very breath is visible as I step out into the white cold.

Later, when I come from the barn the pine is ermine-clad;
the cellar is a white frosted cake, and my window is etched by the Great Artist.

The snow comes faster now, the flakes dancing, swirling, circling, searching,
and finding my uncovered head, include me in their avalanche, and I'm lost in an alabaster world.

FRAN MERRILL, a prize-winning poet from Shawnee, is a member of Shawnee Writers and the OWFI.