12-15-2018

My Father's Wars

Sheila A. Murphy

Abstract
Longer now than sixty years ago, dying in a veterans’ hospital, committed by my mother

Follow this and additional works at: https://dc.swosu.edu/westview

Part of the Fiction Commons, Nonfiction Commons, Photography Commons, and the Poetry Commons

Recommended Citation Available at: https://dc.swosu.edu/westview/vol34/iss2/7

This Poetry is brought to you for free and open access by the Journals at SWOSU Digital Commons. It has been accepted for inclusion in Westview by an authorized administrator of SWOSU Digital Commons. For more information, please contact phillip.fitzsimmons@swosu.edu.
My Father’s Wars

In memory of Thomas James Gallagher, 1st Lt. U. S. Army Air Service Aeronautics (1885-1954)

by Sheila A. Murphy

Longer now than sixty years ago,
dying in a veterans’ hospital, committed by my mother, unable to be her husband or a lawyer or my father, you are forever committed to my memory: walking stiff-legged down Main Street, and once, mirrored in my eyes, turning as you tried, too late, to hide an amber bottle under cellar stairs.
Born when you were fifty-one and deaf,
I find your face in fading photos, smiling, proud, a man I never knew:

Perched atop your horse, in broad-brimmed hat, on border duty in New Mexico—the year is 1916. You look so young.
Standing near the cockpit of a bi-plane, goggles perched jauntily above your brow, you’re poised to fly at Kelly Field in Texas, before the 1917 crash that closed your ears and introduced your pain.
In 1942, after leading the Memorial Day parade to Victory Field, flanked by flags and cannon and four wizened Civil War veterans, you call to render our tribute to the sacrifices of armed forces scattered on far flung fronts…. fading words on yellowed paper, brittle in my hand.
Oh Pop, you’re marching, marching, still.