Big

James E. Fowler
Univ. of Central Arkansas

Abstract
The setting sun casts a Giacometti shadow before me.

Follow this and additional works at: https://dc.swosu.edu/westview

Part of the Fiction Commons, Nonfiction Commons, Photography Commons, and the Poetry Commons

Recommended Citation
Available at: https://dc.swosu.edu/westview/vol34/iss2/22
Big
by James E. Fowler

The setting sun
casts a Giacometti shadow before me.

It stilts along
on giraffe legs
by the meter,

arms at side,
a small bulb head on top.

Its list of things to do at some remove

must be simple,
perhaps an affair of fruit trees

ripe for picking,
a neighborly hand at mending thatch.

A folk figure,
this, opposite to the petty dwarf counting and grudging.
An innate largeness
of mild gesture

makes its arrival
at any scene
a pleasing turn.

Songbirds perch on its narrow shoulders—goodwives see hope

of clearing chimneys—even cats find
cause to stretch.

Turning the corner,
though, I lose
this placid giant

and trudge onward,
taking daily concerns
in small stride.