Sunday Morning

Matthew C. Brennan
Indiana State University

Follow this and additional works at: https://dc.swosu.edu/westview

Part of the Fiction Commons, Nonfiction Commons, Photography Commons, and the Poetry Commons

Recommended Citation
Available at: https://dc.swosu.edu/westview/vol35/iss1/38

This Poetry is brought to you for free and open access by the Journals at SWOSU Digital Commons. It has been accepted for inclusion in Westview by an authorized administrator of SWOSU Digital Commons. For more information, please contact phillip.fitzsimmons@swosu.edu.
Sunday Morning

By Matthew C. Brennan

Back home from Kroger, I sense that something’s terribly wrong: five squad cars flashing red cordon the street, and yellow tape extends from a fencepost to a worksite shed across from us. Beside it rests a Jeep that jumped the curb and stopped, and running from the scene, a woman, sobbing, scrunches her face into a hand-wrung rag, disfigured by whatever horror she was brought to see behind the white construction trailer.

Later, in their now-quiet cars, the cops roll away and leave the tape to flap in the wind like litter from a Sunday picnic. Nothing on the news, no sightings of the suffering young woman anywhere. So afternoon slips into evening, couples walking their well-groomed dogs and killing time, the half moon rising, a slow leisurely winding down of a watch reset on Monday morning.